Martin Sees Ruml Plan Victory Sure In House

Predicts 12 Votes To Spare for G.O.P. Skip-a-Year Tax Forgiveness Plan

By Edward Ryan
Post Staff Writer

House Republican Leader Martin of Massachusetts yesterday definitely predicted victory for the Ruml plan of full abatement of one year's income taxes, as political detonations were discharged right and left under three first-line competing pay-as-you-go tax measures.

Late in the day there were rising indications that all three of the bills might be tossed aside in favor of some compromise to be written on the floor.

Predictions were forthcoming that in two more days of general debate rival tax leaders might have succeeded in blasting to pieces, as far as chances for passage were concerned, the Carlson-Ruml plan, the Ways and Means plan, and the Forand-Robertson plan, and that the House would then be compelled to write its own tax abatement ticket.

Others Confident, Too

At the same time advocates of the various plans continued to assert that their own proposals were headed for passage.

Some pressure was on to line up sentiment for abating a half-year of taxes for all individuals, instead of a full year, the general basis of the Carlson and Forand plans, as against no abatement except at bargain discounts, the basis of the Ways and Means plan.

Martin and tax leaders of his party predicted passage of the Ruml plan with antiwindfall modifications in the bill by Representative Carlton (Republican) of Kansas.

Martin forecast victory for it with 12 votes to spare, while some members on his side reported that the Democratic strategy would be to load it up with amendments in an effort to block it. Republican members said the move would not succeed.

Democratic Views Differ

Democratic opinion was divided. Advocates of various plans on the majority side predicted that if the Carlson plan could be licked by an overdose of amendments, the same treatment would spell certain defeat for the bill by Representative Forand (Democrat) of Rhode Island, containing the plan of Representative Robertson (Democrat) of Virginia, to abate the 19 per cent combined normal and first surtax for all persons and collect higher surtax liabilities by the present system.

Defeat of the Carlson and Forand plans would create the possibility of sending the Ways and Means bill to the Senate. Some backers of the Ways and Means bill predicted such an outcome, while other Democrats said it would never happen, and Republicans concurred.

At the same time as the debate swung from taxes to politics, members on both sides conceded that it would be politically impossible for the House to write no pay-as-you-go legislation at all.

Around the three main tax bills, politics' issues were piled high during yesterday's debate, but the party warfare reached its hottest point in late afternoon in an outburst of criticism hurled at each other by Representative Doughton

Adm. Land Action Again Delayed

Senate action on confirmation of Rear Admiral Emory S. Land for another term as chairman of the Maritime Commission was blocked again yesterday by Republicans who caught the Democratic majority napping. The vote, however, was scheduled for Tuesday.

Many Face Meatless Sunday As Supplies Rapidly Dwindle

By Linton Burkett
Post Staff Writer

Meatless storage rooms of the large packing companies in Washington greeted the frantic retailers swamped with mounting demands for meat and more meat from ration-haunted housewives yesterday.

The Capital rolled one day nearer meat rationing, with the prospect that many householders would go without meat on Sunday. The city's already over burdened restaurant facilities are having an increased burden placed on them.

By noon the packing companies declared their supplies were exhausted, although they were confident of having good stocks on hand when rationing begins on Monday.

Canny dealers swept their show cases and counters clean of all meats late yesterday and locked what they had left in their refrigerators in anticipation of meeting requirements of old and regular customers today.

However, they warned, there is little left, and that is mostly in the form of cuts.

Few indeed were the stores still with beef or pork for sale by late afternoon. Johnny-Come-Latelies perforce had to observe this Lenten Friday by not eating any meat.

Demands for fresh vegetables increased despite the fact that these foods already had soared in price.

Meanwhile some butchers were reported circumventing ceiling prices by giving fancy names to familiar roasts and cuts.

The lowly chuck and almost equally lowly rump roasts were burgeoning forth with new monikers. Butchers charged meat hungry patrons as much as 79 cents a pound for a homely rump roast and 60 and over for the tough chuck, cut from the neck of the beef.

Different shops have adopted different names and there is no uniformity in the practice.

It was the opinion of packers and retailers that there was no meat famine, but that enormous quantities were withheld from the market during the past week, probably at the behest of Government agencies, for two reasons:

One was the desire to have an ample supply in the butcher shops when rationing begins, in order that confidence in the system may be engendered in the public by reason of the variety and quantity on hand.

Another was believed to have been the desire to prevent any effort at hoarding even such a perishable food as fresh meat, on the part of the public. This was particularly true with cured hams, dealers believe.

In few shops could there be found any poultry late yesterday and heavy demands for fish also were reported.

President Acts

Lost Commas Again Delay D.C. Pay Bill

The President took time out from directing the war effort yesterday to tell Congress that a couple of commas were missing from the District pay bill.

Furthermore, the Chief Executive added, he couldn't act properly on the bill until the commas were replaced, because they made a difference in the interpretation of the bill. It happened this way:

White House legal experts were going over S. 17 which provides $300 annual raises for local police, firemen, teachers and a few miscellaneous other employes, preparatory to submitting it to the President for his decision.

In the process, they discovered that the House District Committee, in writing the bill, had used a pair of commas toward the end of Section One which did not appear on the enrolled copy furnished the White House.

All agreed that the absence of the punctuation was due to a typographical error somewhere along the line, but according to the White House, the bill might give double raises to some District workers unless the commas were on duty.

Although the mistake will delay executive consideration of the bill for a few days, Capitol legislators figured a way out which won't impede its progress very long. A concurrent resolution was rushed through both Houses yesterday which simply directs the enrolling clerks to reclaim the comma-less copy from the White House, officially insert two commas at the proper point, and send it back.

All this will be done forthwith, it was promised.

The commas were left out of a passage which lists all the categories of municipal employes who are to receive the $300 increase. The list ends up with:

"All other employes of the District of Columbia Government, except employes whose wages are fixed . . . by wage boards or similar administrative authority serving the same purpose, not covered by (the Federal overtime bill)."

The commas before "except" and after "purpose" are ones that turned up missing. The White House says that with the commas in place, the bill applies to all other District of Columbia employes not covered by the Federal bill, with the exception of wage

New Food Boss Lacks Power, Farmers Fear

Agriculture Programs Held Up Pending Davis Arrival to Take Over

While the Department of Agriculture marked time in its farm programs pending the arrival Monday of Wartime Food Administrator Chester C. Davis, farm leaders yesterday expressed concern lest Davis had been given no more real authority than Secretary Wickard has held.

President Roosevelt at his press conference outlined "powers, duties, and functions" of the new Administration of Food Prodution and Distribution by declaring it would operate as an autonomous agency within the Department of Agriculture.

Davis, the President announced, will have complete jurisdiction over all farm and food prices—especially retail prices as they affect the consumer. However, he will not supersede Prentiss Brown, the price administrator.

Will Cooperate With OPA

The Chief Executive emphasized that the new administrator and the OPA will work in close collaboration and that Secretary Wickard will cooperate with Davis. He said that, obviously, Davis would report directly to him and that Wickard as a Cabinet member is also responsible to him.

He said Davis would be given membership on the Economic Stabilization Board, if such a step should prove necessary.

Presumably he would act through Wickard on questions over which the War Production Board has authority—such as those of farm machinery and pressure cookers for canning. But if it should become necessary, the President said, Davis also would be made a WPB member.

The President declared he considered food prospects of the country this year very good. He said that large farm machinery manufacturers, now converted to war production, would go back into the machinery business to help alleviate the critical farm implement shortage.

The trouble now, he said, was not so much one of quantity as of distribution. Only the large manufacturers have dealers in all parts of the country and they have been forced to convert to war production. The WPB now admits it has made a mistake in its estimates that the smaller plants could supply the farm machinery necessary, he D'Alesandro Asks Full Report On All Slum Properties in D. C.

By Mary Spargo
Post Staff Writer

Representative D'Alesandro (Democrat) of Maryland, chairman of the subcommittee on public health of the District Committee, struck a heavy blow yesterday at the heart of the slum housing situation in Washington when he asked for a listing of all slum properties, their valuations, the taxes paid, and the revenue received from rental of these houses.

D'Alesandro addressed his request for this information, which will become a part of his committee records, to John Ihlder, executive officer of the Alley Dwelling Authority.

At the same time the fighting Congressman from Baltimore, who has a long record of civic enterprise in his own city behind him, asked Engineer Commissioner C. W. Kutz to prepare a map showing the location of every privy in Washington and the nearest point where sewer connection might be made.

A third request from the subcommittee on public health, hospitals and charities went to Dr. George C. Ruhland, the District health officer. D'Alesandro asked for information regarding the rat exterminating activities in the Nation's Capital.

D'Alesandro asked the health officer to prepare an immediate survey of the need or increased personnel in his department of those persons charged with exterminating

Bill to Raise Food Prices Faces Veto

Move to Include Farm Labor Costs In Parity Sent Back to Committee

By Christine Sadler
Post Staff Writer

The Senate farm bloc scored one and lost one yesterday in its efforts to buck the Administration by forcing an upward revision of agricultural price ceilings.

In a unanimous voice vote, farm leaders agreed with a bipartisan coalition to send back to the Agriculture Committee the Pace bill to compel inclusion of farm labor costs in parity price calculations.

And a moment later the coalition voted with them to send to the White House legislation forcing price ceilings on farm products up to parity plus soil conservation and other Government benefit payments to farmers.

The latter measure, an amendment to the Price Control Act, would force the price of food up 7 per cent, according to Price Administrator Prentiss Brown—and apparently is headed for a presidential veto.

Lewis Outcome Awaited

The Pace bill, which the OPA said would send food prices up an additional 14 per cent, is expected back from the committee as soon as the War Labor Board decides whether John L. Lewis is to have his wage increase for soft coal miners.

If the wage increase is granted, farm bloc leaders confidently anticipate a victory for their measure, believing the onus of "forcing an inflationary spiral" could not then be attached to them.

Senator Lucas (Democrat) of Illinois, who moved to recommit the Pace bill, explained his vote for the Bankhead measure to force benefit payments out of parity prices by declaring he did not believe it would be widespread in its effects on inflation controls. Most of its benefits, he declared, would accrue to corn and wheat farmers because their products are among the few now selling below parity.

Second Veto Seen

"If corn and wheat get to parity," Lucas said, "I believe it will stop most of the agitation to raise all farm prices."

Senator Downey (Democrat) of California said the President probably would veto the Pace bill, too, because of "public misconception as to its effects." He expressed hope, however, that this "misconception" could be dissipated when hearings were held.

The Administration, reportedly, is relying on the so-called "city" vote to sustain its veto of either or both measures.

Farm leaders themselves are not confident they could muster votes to pass the bills over vetoes and some are eager to get them out of

Allied 'Big Four' Must Work Together To Avoid It, He Tells Md. Legislature

(Text on Page 11.)

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Staff Writer

Annapolis, Md., March 26.—Anthony Eden, British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, said here tonight that if a third World War is to be avoided the Big Four of the Allies—America, Britain, Russia and China—"must act together in war and in peace."

And he renewed the British pledge to continue fighting with America until Japan, as well as Germany and Italy, has been militarily crushed.

In the only major oration of his current American visit, the No. 2 statesman of Britain said that the greatest of all peace aims was to see to it that "gangster nations" never again would bring tragedy on the world.

Gangsters Will Be Disarmed

These gangster nations, he said, would be disarmed after the war. Then would arise the task, he said, of finding a common ground on which to build, and without which "we shall not have deserved the victory."

"Any new international authority that we may agree to set up," Captain Eden continued, "can only succeed if it is backed by sufficient strength.

"It will not be enough for one country, or even two, to display the qualities necessary to protect the peace. The work will take all that America and Britain, Russia and China, and the United Nations can offer."

Captain Eden spoke in the historic Statehouse here, the cornerstone of which was laid by that "conscientious Tory," his great-great-grandfather, Sir Robert Eden, last colonial Governor of Maryland, who fled to England in '76, but then returned to Annapolis to die and be buried here.

Greeted With Ovation

Eden was given an ovation when he entered the House chamber. He was wearing a dark pin-striped suit and was smiling broadly. Lord Halifax, the British Ambassador, followed him to the rostrum.

Fighting Union of All French Is Promised by De Gaulle

By James M. Long
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, March 26.—Gen. Charles de Gaulle pledged tonight that he and Gen. Henri Giraud would insure a fighting union of all French forces and end all doubts and rancor at a forthcoming meeting in North Africa.

"I am going very shortly to North Africa," he said in a French-language broadcast over the British radio. ". . . I shall see General Giraud, a great soldier and a noble figure.

"Together, loyally and in a friendly spirit, we shall seek and we shall find means to insure that the French Empire shall be but one empire, that French strength shall be but one strength, that the voice of the French people who fight shall be heard in the world as one voice, and, above all, that this empire, this strength, this voice shall be those desired by the nation."

The broadcast was the Fighting French's answer to an invitation extended March 15 by General Giraud for union of all French under a single banner.

"We have reached one of the greatest hours in our long and difficult history," De Gaulle said. "Let the flame of our ancestors . . . devour all that remains of our doubts and our rancor. Our duty lies in national unity, the source of our supreme efforts and our eternal greatness."

He declared that never in five centuries had France suffered so greatly nor had such high hopes.

"Passionate splits and even fratricidal blows have arisen from the atrocious drama through which we are now passing together," he said. "National unity from which imperial unity cannot be separated is once again the unique salvation and the supreme law."

Declaring that since the armistice Frenchmen actually never had ceased to fight nor had yielded their inheritance, the independence and dignity of France, the Fighting French leader said:

"Other Frenchmen in other French territories have in turn recovered their chance to rise against the enemy. From Algiers to Tananarive (Madagascar), from Dakar (West Africa) to Jibouti (French Somaliland), from Noumea (New Caledonia), to Fort de France (Martinique), there exist means to rebuild French power, strong against the enemy and united in the face of the world, while waiting for the moment when the people of France

No-Strike Pact Not Binding, Lewis Insists

U.M.W. Chief Clashes Repeatedly With Truman Committeemen

NATIONAL WAR Service bill opposed by labor witnesses at Capitol. Page 3.

By Ben W. Gilbert
Post Staff Writer

John L. Lewis clashed repeatedly yesterday with investigating Senators of the Truman Committee and avowed that he was "not necessarily bound" by the Nation-wide no-strike agreement which he signed with leaders of labor and industry in December, 1941.

At a dramatic four-hour public hearing, the bushy-browed leader of the powerful United Mine Workers union, charged that the War Labor Board had "breached" the agreement by applying the "arbitrary" Little Steel formula to wages, thus freeing his union from compliance.

"The agreement was that a court be set up with complaints passed on judicially," he stated. "That has not been done."

The hearing brought out strong indications that Lewis had already discovered a device to secure the desired $2 a day wage increase for the country's 600,000 miners which would not upset the "Little Steel" stabilization formula.

Lewis made frequent references to a two-week-old court decision which required operators of iron mines to pay for so-called "travel time" from the mine entrances to comply with the wage-hour law. Since coal mine pay does not start until miners have arrived at the face of the coal and started work with their picks, application of the decision probably would work to give them the equivalent of a $2-a-day increase changing basic hourly pay rates.

"Operators ought to be loyal and pay compensation for this time,"

Reds Smash 2 Garrisons Near Smolensk

Russians Hold Foe Back in Hard Donets Fighting

By the Associated Press

London (Saturday), March 27.—Russian troops beating against Smolensk's distant defenses wiped out a German garrison at one strong point and captured another, while holding firm against Nazi counterassaults on the Donets River Front near Kharkov in the south, Moscow announced today.

The new Central Front gains, announced in the midnight communique recorded here by the Soviet monitor, were south of Bely, presumably near Dukhovschina, 32 miles from Smolensk.

A Stockholm dispatch said Russian tanks already had broken into Dorogobuzh, 50 miles east of Smolensk, in a frontal assault supporting the northeastern wedge in Smolensk's outlying defense belt.

The communique said 500 Germans were killed in the capture of the two enemy points, 300 of them in the garrison which was outflanked and then attacked from the rear after a group of Red Army men stole across a river.

Several populated places were taken, but the communique suggested part of the Russian troops were consolidating their hard-won gains in the great German salient which so long had threatened Moscow.

Approximately 1100 Germans were reported slain in futile efforts to breach Russian positions between Belgorod and Chuguev in the Kharkov sector during yesterday's fighting, which found the Germans still using a considerable number of tanks.

Near Chuguev, 22 miles southeast of Kharkov, the communique said one Soviet unit alone destroyed 42 Nazi tanks and wiped out a battalion of infantry.

Near Belgorod, 50 miles above

Divorcee Charged With Murder In Noted Horsewoman's Death

Tulsa, Okla., March 26 (AP).—Mrs. Ella B. Howard was held in the matron's quarters of the county jail today on a murder charge, outgrowth of a hotel room shooting Thursday.

She will be arraigned tomorrow morning on the charge of fatally shooting Mrs. T. Karl Simmons, 55, widely known Tulsa horsewoman, in a hotel room scuffle.

Mrs. Howard, 44, prematurely gray, divorcee and mother of a son and daughter, was composed and would make no statement except in presence of her attorney. She said she had come here from her home in Fort Worth, Tex., on business—County Attorney M. S. Simms said this checked, but he was not disclosing the transaction—and had been unable to get a plane home, where she was to sit Thursday for a photographer.

Simms said Mrs. Howard related this story:

Resting in her ninth-floor hotel room, she was brought to the door by someone knocking and calling "telegram." She was confronted by Mrs. Simmons, whom she said she knew slightly. Mrs. Simmons was brandishing a pistol, threatening to kill her.

They grappled and "the next thing I knew she fell to the floor and I could see she was shot." Mrs. Simmons was shot through the heart, one hand and one shoulder.

Messenger Soars From $1080 To $4600 Job in Two Years

By the Associated Press

The case of a Navy Yard messenger who in two years advanced to the job of business analyst with the Board of Economic Warfare at $4600 a year stirred the interest yesterday of the House Civil Service Committee investigating Government personnel.

Chairman Ramspeck (Democrat) of Georgia asked Arthur S. Flemming Civil Service Commissioner, to look into it.

Flemming said he would, adding "if such a thing happened it was the result of our wartime policy of declaration of authority to agency heads."

Ramspeck, in presenting the case, said that in October, 1940, "the messenger was in a Navy Yard at $1080 a year. In January, 1941, he was made a War Department clerk at $1440 salary. In February, 1941, he was transferred to the office of the Secretary of War at the same salary. In March, 1941, his pay was jumped to $3200 a year. In October, 1941, he went to the Board of Economic Warfare as an intelligence officer, salary $3800 a year. In September, 1942, he was made a business analyst there at $4600 yearly. His record shows he has no particular qualifications for the job."

Representative Manasco (Democrat) of Alabama, of the committee remarked, "also there are lots of young lawyers around here whose only duty it is to write regulations. The more complex they make the regulations the more they are paid. I think we might take a look at those fellows also."

Allied Headquarters in North Africa, March 26.—Infantry of the British Eighth Army inched slowly forward into fortifications of the Mareth Line under a hail of gunfire today while American forces 70 miles away fought grimly to keep Marshal Erwin Rommel's flank pinned to the Tunisian coast.

The seventh night of Gen. Sir Bernard L. Montgomery's attack on the deep Mareth belt of minefields and pillboxes backed up by concentrations of armor and artillery found the British and the enemy still locked in a struggle reminiscent of the first World War's many "battles of position and attrition."

There was complete absence of information on the situation in the El Hamma area, where daring units of the Eighth Army had struck far around and into the rear of the Mareth Line. But continued heavy attacks by the Allies' western desert air force on enemy armor in the vicinity of El Hamma indicated that the flanking British force was holding its initial gains there despite its long supply line.

Dense Defense System

(The Algiers radio said the British before El Hamma, which is 20 miles from the Axis supply port of Gabes, were meeting an "extremely dense antitank defense system," but that they had captured the height of Djebel Tobaga, dominating Gabes. There was no Allied confirmation of this report.)

American troops entrenched on the heights dominating El Guetaria Pass, through which runs the southernmost road from Gafsa to the sea, were counterattacked again by German infantry seeking to infiltrate and outflank their rocky positions.

Although the Germans got a foothold on the southern slopes of Djebel Derba, which is on the south side of the pass, front line dispatches said the Americans kept control of the road.

Gen. George S. Patton, jr.'s other American forces were engaged in difficult mopping-up operations against the enemy holding high ground 5 miles south of Maknassy and elsewhere in the long Or[illegible] range.

Overturn in Laval's Cabinet Reported

Three Ministers Out After 14 Diplomats Leave Madrid Posts

By the Associated Press

The Berlin radio announced last night a shakeup in Pierre Laval's Vichy cabinet, in which five ministers were dismissed, and this development came amid continued desertions from the Vichy government by foreign diplomats who were switching their allegiance to Gen. Henri Honore Giraud, French high commissioner in Allied northwest Africa.

The ministers "taking leave of Chief of State Petain," said the broadcast recorded by the Associated Press, were:

Joseph Barthelmy, justice; Admiral Jean Marie Abrial, navy; Gen. Jean Francois Jannekyn, aviation; Jules Brevie, colonies, and Rear Admiral Rene Platon, secretary of state in the foreign ministry held by Laval himself.

The Berlin radio stressed that the shakeup was "harmonious, insuring the unconditional support of the Laval government," and said some of the posts were being telescoped, to give a greater concentration of power.

Ministries Obsolete

Actually, most of the French ministries are obsolete. France has lost nearly all her colonies to either General Giraud or Gen. Charles de Gaulle, Fighting French leader, and the Germans demobilized all the French military services when they occupied all France last fall following the Allied invasion of North Africa.

A clew to Laval's concern over his situation was seen in Berlin's prediction that "a great diplomatic revival" by Vichy is impending.

A further indication of rebellion and unrest inside Axis-occupied France was Berlin's report that Robert Bousquet, secretary general for police in the interior ministry, "will be promoted in rank," and that "there's talk of a new police ministry to be established."

Bousquet is the man Vichy has assigned on many expeditions against dissidents in France.

Madrid dispatches earlier said a crisis was developing in Laval's regime, and indicated that the resignation of 14 members of the Vichy diplomatic and consular services in Spain had contributed to the tension.

Switch to de Gaulle

These men switched their allegiance to Gen. Henri Giraud, French high commissioner in North Africa.

Radio France at Algiers, in a broadcast recorded by the FCC, said that the French charge d'affiaires at Lisbon and other personnel in the legation there also "refuse to follow Vichy's policy any longer."

The resignations in Madrid were said to have been a definite blow to Laval because the embassy there had been one of Vichy's largest. Only Ambassador Pietri and several attaches remained. The entire consular staffs in Barcelona, Bilboa, Valencia and Malaga were said to have quit.

The ranks of dissident Frenchmen inside France also were said to have increased heavily because of the arrest in France of Col. Francois De La Rocque, former Croix de Feu leader.

Delicate Hint

British Planes From Malta Visit Rome

By the Associated Press

London, March 26.—R. A. F. Intruder planes, taking off from battered Malta, where for months the words "Bomb Rome" have been chalked on the walls of ruined buildings, sallied boldl over the Italian capital and environs last night, and one of the pilots on his return expressed regret at not having been able to single out the "big bullfrog"—Mussolini.

First reports from Malta quoted only the pilot who wanted to find Mussolini, but later it was learned a number of attacking craft had flown over the capital area for the first time.

Only one pilot told of what the Italian capital looks like at night from the air.

"The moon was quite bright," he said, "and although it was very hazy we could see flashes of electric trams or trains in Rome itself and the buildings of the city." He said he then went on to strafe trains in an outlying station.

Enemy planes, apparently attempting a reprisal for the closest known hostile approach to Rome, caused an alert today on Malta for the first time in 22 days. RAF planes rose to meet them, and two enemy raiders were reported downed on approaches to Malta.

The Italian high command communique acknowledged attacks last night on Campo Leone, 21 miles by rail from Rome, and Cisterna, 31 miles outside the capital, but said there were no casualties. Both are on the route from Rome to Naples.

Last night's Rome sortie moved observers to recall that in 1941 Prime Minister Churchill advised the Axis that Britain would retaliate by attacking Rome if bombs were dropped in either Athens or Cairo.

Apparently heedful of this warning, Axis planes bombed right up to the edge of Athens but scrupulously spared the city proper.

Cairo has been bombed, but last night's sortie was the nearest that the British have come to carrying out Churchill's threat against Rome.

Belgian Milk Cargo Refused, Premier Is Told

London, March 26 (AP).—The British government has informed Herbert Pierpot, premier and minister of national defense of the Belgian government in exile, that the United States and Great Britain cannot comply with his request to allow the freighter Caritas to carry a cargo of powdered milk to Belgium on her next voyage.

The Ministry of Economic Warfare said that to grant Pierlot's request would be contrary to Allied policy of banning shipments of foodstuffs to Axis-occupied countries.

Troop Sleepers, Kitchen Cars to Be Constructed

Chicago, March 26 (AP).—The Association of American Railroads announced today the Nation's carriers had tentatively agreed to put into service 1200 troop sleepers of a special design and 400 Army kitchen cars.

A spokesman for the association said many phases of the project still had to be ironed out before the equipment would be built, but that a definite start had been made here today.

Each car would contain 10 sections of three berths each, the upper berth fixed, the middle one built so that it could swing down during the daytime and form the back of the seat. The berths would be set crosswise in the car.

As described by the spokesman, the kitchen cars would be in effect traveling garrison kitchens, each equipped with two ranges, ice boxes and shower baths for the crews.

Dakota Flood Drives Families From Homes

Bismarck, N. Dak., March 26 (AP). Rampaging creeks and streams in North Dakota continued to pour water over their banks today in localities across the State, driving scores of families from their homes, inundating countless acres of farm land and causing inestimable property damage.

loaded with ammunition, blew up and several small ships disappeared completely. Two small ships were blown out of the water onto the quay and a number of nearby buildings were demolished.

Aerial photographs taken during the raid revealed that the Palermo waterfront and harbor were blanketed by bomb bursts. The earlier report had said merely that one ship was blown up.

(The Berlin radio broadcast a commentary by Capt. Ludwig Sertorius saying the lull in the Tunisian battle by no means meant that the fighting was over, because the "enemy is determined to enforce a decision." He added that while Allied losses had been serious, the British and Americans have ample reserves and have "not exhausted their offensive power."

There yet was no indication that the Germans and Italians defending the formidable fortifications were cracking under the Eighth Army's sledgehammer blows, but the decreasing power of the counterattacks launched by Rommel attested the effectiveness of the British assault by land and air.

Patton forces, meanwhile, maintained their threat against Rommel's escape corridor to the north.

Until a decision is reached in the Mareth battle, the Americans appear destined to fight a series of hard tactical engagements in the Orbata Hills.

It was not apparent whether Pattor's forces meant to drive from El Guetaria Pass and Maknassy through to the coast and thus plant themselves squarely across Rommel's escape route into northern Tunisia, or to remain back at a suitable distance for the purpose of falling upon Rommel's flank once the Eighth Army got him on the run again.

(While the Allied drives to envelop Axis forces in southern Tunisia appeared to be making slow but steady progress, military observers in London estimated there were approximately 80,000 Axis troops in the area—more than 40,000 Germans and fewer than that number of Italians. This was believed to be a considerably smaller figure than the total of men available to Gen. Sir Harold Alexander, the Allied ground commander in Tunisia.)

The Allied Western Desert Air Force continued to dominate its sphere of the fighting, sweeping low in great numbers to blast the enemy's troops, armor and fortifications and detaching scores of heavy bombers to destroy his harbors, landing fields and shipping.

American Flying Fortresses sank a small ship at Sousse, damaged a large vessel and started fires in the docks area. Escorting Lightnings shot down an enemy interceptor and shot up motor barges off the Tunisian Coast. Another unit of fighters reported 50 direct cannon hits on nine Nazi tanks.

One formation of Messerschmitt-210 twin-engined fighter-bombers was forced to jettison its bombs on its own troops when trapped by a group of Spitfires near El Hamma.

Allied light, medium and heavy bombers were reported to have caused immense destruction to an enemy tank park containing several hundred vehicles in the same area, the pilots saying it offered the best target they had seen since the big push began nearly a week ago.

Allied Barrage Sets Record

Allied Headquarters in North Africa, March 26 (INS).—Allied warplanes and huge artillery pieces of the British Eighth Army bombarded the enemy's Mareth Line tonight on a scale even greater than the furious barrage laid down against the Afrika Korps at El Alamein last October.

(After the British cracked Marshal Erwin Rommel's defenses at El Alamein last fall it was revealed that in one period Gen. Sir Bernard L. Montgomery's artillery hurled more than 1000 tons of shells in an hour into the enemy positions. At that time, there was in action one field gun every 23 yards over a 6-mile front, a total of roughly 460 pieces.)

Eden Warns of Third World War Peril

the speaker's stand, framed by three flags—the Stars and Stripes, the Union Jack and the flag of Maryland.

In introducing Eden, Gov. Herbert R. O'Conor made reference to this, saying:

"The portrait of Sir Robert Eden today gracing the walls of this chamber—this State House, whose cornerstone Governor Eden laid—his honored resting place in St. Anne's Church Yard within a stone's throw:—All these represent permanent ties binding together the House of Eden and the people of Maryland."

Captain Eden, at the outset of his speech, evoked cheers when he recalled that Maryland was founded as a sanctuary of religious freedom. He said he was proud to be descended from the Calvert family. And it was noted that he pronounced the name as they do in southern Maryland—"Cawlvert."

Proud of His Calvert Ancestors

"I am even prouder of the fact," he said, "that one of the Calverts, the third Lord Baltimore, was the prime mover of the great Act of 1649, by which the early settlers were assured of full freedom to worship God according to their conscience.

"That was nearly 300 years ago, but our times have given new significance to that event."

The distinguished Briton, standing in a glare of newsreel klieg lights and facing the General Assembly of Maryland, said that in all his visits to foreign capitals no journey had been "more worthwhile" than that to Washington. Warning that nothing sudden or sensational should be expected, he said:

"But there has been a meeting of minds between us about the present and the future that will, we are sure, bear fruit."

The burden of his address was on the necessity for cooperation among the United Nations and the danger of a narrow nationalism such as brought on the current war. But he also touched on several points that have caused questioning in Washington, Chungking and elsewhere.

Promises Japan Will Be Crushed

Eden said that the war would be prosecuted to a "final victory."

"Let there be no mistake," he said, "we shall not rest upon our arms until every one of our enemies has unconditionally surrendered. We, no less than you, and our partner, China, have a score to settle with the Japanese; nor shall we cease fighting until that evil growth in the Pacific has been cut back. We shall be with you in this to the end."

Eden was lavish in his praise for China's gallantry.

"The day will come," he promised, "when the Burma Road will once again be open. It will carry to China an ever-increasing volume of supply, which the efforts of your country and mine are turning out daily from the assembly lines."

Eden emphasized that Britain had "no secret engagements with any country." Neither, he said, did Britain seek any territory.

At the same time, however, he said that enemies of Great Britain who looked to this war to sound the death knell of the British Empire were very much mistaken.

"Nothing in the world is more unlikely," he said.

Lesson of World War I

Going back to the period between the last war and the current conflict, Eden said:

"If there is one lesson we should have learned from the distresses of those years, it is surely this, that we cannot shut our windows and draw our curtains, and be careless of what is happening next door or on the other side of the street.

"No nation can close its frontiers and hope to live secure. We cannot have prosperity in one country and misery in its neighbor, peace in one hemisphere and war in the other.

"And if we try to have these things, we shall be back on the old road to war. We shall never find security or progress within heavily defended national fortresses. We shall only find them by the greatest possible measure of cooperation.

"The United Nations, and in particular the United States, the British Commonwealth, China and the Soviet Union, must act together in war and in peace."

And more than this, he said, our common safety demands that overwhelming force be marshaled not only in time of war but in the peace that is to come afterward.

Lord Halifax Also Speaks

The people in the packed State House jumped to their feet and gave Eden prolonged applause at the end of his speech.

Lord Halifax accepted Governor O'Conor's invitation to follow Eden to the speaker's stand. He recalled how he had come to Annapolis two years ago on the battleship King George V and how President Roosevelt had met him here.

Lord Halifax said that the presence of Foreign Secretary Eden in Annapolis, speaking in a forum typical of the free legislative establishments in America and Britain, was both symbolic and historic.

The House of Delegates closed the ceremony by adopting a resolution praising Britain's gallantry in the war with Germany. The resolution was adopted unanimously and a copy handed to Eden.

Yanks Pound Japs' Biggest Burma Airfield

By the Associated Press

New Delhi, March 26.—Heavy American aerial blows in two days of raiding against the Japanese in Burma were announced today in a communique of the Tenth United States Air Force, including "a highly successful operation" against the key airfield at Meiktila.

"This is one of the most important Japanese airdromes in Burma," the war bulletin said, "and has been used in the past as a forward base from which to attack Allied installations in Assam. There were many hits on barracks as well as on other buildings in the field. One twin-engined Japanese bomber was destroyed on the ground."

That attack was carried out Tuesday by medium bombers. Zero-type fighters attempting to intercept the formation were driven off and two were probably damaged.

Yards, Bridges Raided

The following day medium and heavy bombers raided railroad yards at Maymyo, Ava Bridge near Mandalay and Myitnge Bridge.

From both days' attacks all planes and personnel returned safely.

R. A. F. Blenheim bombers made a successful attack on the Katha railway junction in central Burma yesterday and followed up with a night assault on an enemy airdrome near Meiktila between Mandalay and Rangoon, a British communique announced. All aircraft returned safely, the bulletin said.

Yesterday afternoon Japanese bombers attacked an Allied airdrome in southeastern Bengal, the communique declared, causing slight damage and some casualties.

On the ground front in western Burma only patrol activity was reported.

Japs Stabilize Hupeh Positions

Chungking, March 26 (AP).—The Chinese high command in a communique today recorded fighting in Hupeh Province in only two areas, indicating that the Japanese had stabilized their positions still firmly in possession of four anchor points safeguarding shipping on the Yangtze River to Ichang.

In one of the two areas where fighting there was announced, the war bulletin said the Chinese captured a small town.

The communique also told of a clash March 13 in northern Kiangsu Province in which it said a Japanese force had been hurled back with "considerable casualties."

can in turn rise again."

[De Gaulle's reference to Fort de France, which has a pro-Vichy governor, Admiral Robert, was considered significant because of the present there of the demobilized French aircraft carrier Bearn and other warships.—Editor's note.]

Labor's Support

Meanwhile, Albert Guigui, secretary of the French Confederation of Labor, who recently escaped from France, brought word of the federation's formal adherence to the Fighting French and delivered this message: "We believe in you. We trust we shall meet you soon."

Following De Gaulle on the radio, Andre Philip, Fighting French Commissioner of the Interior and Labor, pledged that France, would have a complete democracy, responsible to the people but with a different constitution and a complete change of leaders.

He disclosed that the French Communist, Socialist, Radical and Conservative parties all had been reorganized underground in recent months and added that the recent series of uprisings in the Haute Savoie region "came far too early."

Catroux in Algiers

London, March 26 (AP).—The Algiers radio said in a broadcast that Gen. Georges Catroux, Fighting French delegate general to Syria and liaison man between Gen. Charles de Gaulle and Gen. Henri Giraud, arrived in the Algerian capital today.

2-Ton Bombs Blast Axis Lines in Tunisia

London, March 26 (INS).—R. A. F. bombers are showering deadly two-ton "blockbusters" on Axis positions in Tunisia, presumably in the Mareth Line region, without letup both day and night, Reuter's news agency said tonight in a dispatch from Cairo.

Yanks Roar Down to 75 Feet To Blast Japs' New Guinea Base

By the Associated Press

Allied Headquarters in Australia (Saturday), March 27.—Dipping as low as 75 feet to loose their bombs, Allied four-motored bombers blasted newly-constructed installations and shipping at the new Japanese base of Wewak on the north coast of New Guinea in a three-hour night attack, an Allied communique said today.

Using 500 and 1000-pound bombs, the Flying Fortresses scored two hits on a 4000-ton merchantman in the harbor, leaving it badly damaged, and pounded the airdrome, town, and docks with 19 tons of explosives.

The 1000-pound bombs, the announcement said, "caused especially serious damage among the shore installations."

The attacking planes dove through heavy antiaircraft fire and all returned safely, the communique said.

Wewak, 360 miles north of Port Moresby, apparently was given special attention because of its position as a reinforcement and intermediate supply port for the hard-pressed Japanese holding the Lae-Salamaua sector to the south.

Japanese New Guinea positions at Lae, Salamaua, Finschhafen and Mubo along the coast southeast of Wewak, also were bombed and strafed during yesterday's operations.

In the Lae sector numerous fires which were started "gradually merged into one large blaze visible 20 miles away," the bulletin said.

Allied airmen made 14 passes over the Mubo positions where fires were started and machinegun posts silenced. "No enemy planes were in the vicinity," the communique reported.

Nazis Rush Dutch Coast Defenses

London, March 26 (AP).—The Netherlands information service reported today that the entire coastal area of Holland for a distance of nearly 15 miles inland was being cleared of inhabitants by the Germans, who were wrecking thousands of buildings and erecting coastal defense against an Allied invasion.

It said that probably 24,000 houses had been destroyed in The Hague alone as the Nazis worked desperately to perfect their fortifications.

10th Child to Go

No Room Left On Mother's Service Pin

RITA VAN COUTREN, 22, at her job as a mail courier at Bolling Field

By Edith Evans
Associated Press Staff Writer

New York, March 26.—"Mom" Van Coutren, as fellow clerks call her in the 10-cent store where she works, is wondering how she can add another star to the nine on her service pin.

For the tenth time, one of Mrs. Emma Van Coutren's children, a girl this time, has joined up with Uncle Sam, and is getting out of civilian clothes into a uniform.

"Maybe a jeweler could add a small bar to it, across the bottom," she said, between sales at the ribbon counter in the Lexington Avenue store, near Grand Central Station. "That way there would be room for two more stars if my other two boys are inducted—and it looks like they will be."

The pin was the gift of the American Women's Volunteer Society, honoring her for being the mother of seven sons and two daughters in the armed services.

The smiling, white-haired mother explained there used to be too many long-faced neighbors coming to call and sympathize, and too many invitations to luncheons that invariably ended up in tears.

"Now I have a good excuse," she beamed. "I say, 'I'm sorry, I can't come to your luncheon because I go to business.' And when the long-faced callers come, I am not at home."

Letter writing—one a week to each child—keeps her busy evenings.

There was a time when Mrs. Van Coutren could write one letter to three sons who were stationed on the same ship. The three have been separated since.

Daughter Helen, 37, the newest recruit, will be inducted into the WAACs next month. Rita, 21, went into the WAACs last fall, and "Mom" took over her job in the dime store. Rita is in Washington, D. C. Also in the WAACs is Adine, 27, who was an inspector in a defense plant in St. Louis. She is stationed in Boston.

The boys are: Cyril, 36; Joseph, 35; John, 24; Paul, 23; Vincent, 22, and Victor, all in the Navy, and Thomas, 26, in the Army.

The two civilian sons are Leo, 32, a Columbia, Mo., businessman, and James, 30, a policeman in St. Louis.

The father, L. M. Van Coutren of St. Louis, is a window decorator. Mrs. Van Coutren, who came East to visit her daughters, and remained to keep house for them, said that she would return to St. Louis after her daughter, Helen was inducted.

WAAC Rita Van Coutren, who is on duty at Bolling Field as a mail courier, has been here for about two months, having come to Washington after finishing her basic training. Her superior officers yesterday were warm in their praise of the manner in which she performs the duties assigned to her at the field, saying she was a willing worker who went ahead quickly with her assignments and did them "very well."

Former Cargo Ships, Converted, Catapult And Ferry Planes

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

The Navy announced yesterday that it is putting a large fleet of auxiliary aircraft carriers into service as a "triple menace" to the Axis.

American shipyards, it was said, "are introducing to the enemy" dozens of the smaller carriers. A "number" are already in service in the Atlantic and Pacific and "literally scores" of others are under construction, the announcement said.

Vice Admiral Frederick J. Horne, vice chief of naval operations, in discussing the new type of ship with reporters, said it has proved "very successful."

Rapid Output

He declined to be specific as to the number of auxiliary carriers now operating at sea, but declared that the output of the ships is "coming along very rapidly."

The triple-threat character of the new auxiliary carriers was described by the Navy as follows:

1. They "carry a force of aircraft adequate to patrol vast reaches of the ocean in the path of and around convoys delivering war supplies," menacing enemy undersea, surface and air raiders.

2. Ferrying fueled-up military planes part way across the oceans to within flying range of combat areas, then catapulting them into the air. "Substantial" numbers of aircraft have been delivered to North Africa by this means, it was said.

3. While not primarily suited for combat, they are available in emergencies for operation with Navy task forces against enemy fleets or land bases.

Converted Trade Ships

The auxiliary carriers are either converted merchant vessels or craft built from keel up in merchant-type hulls. Their chief difference from regular combat carriers is that they have less armor and considerably less speed.

However, they can be built in less than one-half of the time of regular battle carriers and at a fraction of the cost in money and "bottleneck materials."

In pronouncing the type "very successful," Admiral Horne said that "naturally" their slower speed means they have "limitations," but added that "on the whole we have been very pleased with the work we have been able to get out of them."

Defect Remedied

The installation of catapults on the auxiliary craft helps to remedy one defect found in the first converted vessels—inability of planes to take off in bad weather due to their smaller decks and lower speed—Admiral Horne said.

As to landing, the Admiral declared that "you just don't land on any carrier if the sea is too rough." No planes, however, have been lost due to inability to land in bad weather as yet, he said.

Auxiliary carriers—of the converted type—are serving in combat zones in both the Atlantic and Pacific, Horne said. No American craft of this type have been lost to date, he stated, although one of them which was turned over to the British was sunk in the North African landing.

Result of Experiment

The present auxiliary carrier is the result of an experiment launched by the Navy two years ago. On recommendation of the general board, one of the Maritime Commission C-3 freighters, the S. S. Mormacmail, was rebuilt with a flight deck and other necessities. Renamed the U. S. S. Long Island, she is now in service.

"So successful" was the experiment, the Navy said yesterday, that a sizeable conversion program was ordered, a year ago, and a number of C-3 ships and Navy tankers were reconstructed to handle planes. Late last year, the program was greatly stepped up to provide "scores" of the auxiliary carriers.

As a result, the Navy said, the United States is "way over and above any other power," Allied or enemy as a constructor of aircraft carriers."

Like the larger type, the auxiliaries have a flight deck, hangar deck elevators, and machine shops able to completely overhaul planes. They are expected to play a leading role in the coming show-down with Axis submarines in the Atlantic.

Shore Leave Ban Lifted in Portland

Portland, Me., March 26 (AP).—The Navy's one-day ban on shore liberty in Portland for men of the fleet was lifted today, Captain Robert Porter, Chief of Staff to the Senior Officer Present Afloat, said. The Navy had charged "inhospitable" treatment of Navy men in Portland.

Captain Porter said the ban had been intended primarily for one day only with the idea that corrective action would be taken or "at least with the hope it would be."

No-Strike Pact Not Binding, Says Lewis

Lewis said. "That's the easy way out."

Earlier, John P. Frey, veteran president of the A. F. of L. Metal Trades Department, preceded Lewis on the stand and called for suspension of the Wagner Act and the National Labor Relations Board for the duration of the war.

Wants Raiding Stopped

Unlike Lewis, who advocated replacing the War Labor Board with on patterned on the lines of the World War I War Labor Board headed by the late President William Howard Taft, Frey advocated that the War Labor Board be given jurisdiction of all labor disputes including those now coming before th NLRB.

Frey, who emphasized that he was speaking only for himself, expressed the opinion that interunion raiding would be blocked by the simple device of suspending the NLRB for the duration. He charged that the C. I. O. was using the privilege of filing complaints against A. F. of L. contracts with the NLRB as a raiding device.

Lewis insisted that the Government has "two policies with respect to inflation," one for workers and another for large corporations.

"On one hand, the Government superinduces inflation by excessive rewards to industry to produce war commodities, and then seeks to fight inflation by denying workers what it gives to industry," Lewis charged.

Controls "Too Feeble"

Inflation can be checked and restrained, but not entirely controlled," he said. "We already have inflation of food prices. The controls of the Government have been too feeble.

"One way to win the war is to give the workers enough to eat."

Senator Ball (Republican) of Minnesota questioned Lewis' implication that the miners were not getting enough to eat, branding it "demagoguery, pure and simple."

Lewis flashed back this reply:

"When you call me a demagogue before I can reply, I hurl it back in your face, sir."

Urged by Senator Burton (Republican) of Ohio to "join" the committee in combatting inflation, Lewis shouted:

"I wish you'd inflate the bellies of these miners."

Various Senators tried their hand at getting Lewis to amplify his statement that he did not consider the no-strike agreement "necessarily binding," but Lewis refused to reveal whether he planned to force a coal strike if he failed to get his wage demands.

"I join in the hope that we will not lose a ton of coal production," he said at one point. "I think everyone wants to do that if humanly possible."

Asked by Senator Ferguson (Republican) of Michigan if he would refuse to submit the case to the War Labor Board, Lewis replied that the decision would have to be made by the U. M. W. policy committee, not by himself.

He agreed with Senator Connally (Democrat) of Texas that "if a strike ran on, it would be a national calamity," but acknowledged that he did not believe a strike of a "few days" would hurt the war effort.

At another point, he replied, "One can always elect to decide how long to bear an injustice."

Lewis maintained that the court decision on computing time worked in mines prevented him from signing a contract on any other basis. He stated that miners spend from an hour and a half to two hours a day traveling underground to their jobs in the mines without getting paid for that time. He expressed the belief that payment for the time would provide a wage increase in violation of the "Little Steel" formula.

Rhetorical Question

"What should the United Mine Workers do?" he asked rhetorically. "We are stopped from signing a contract by a court decision, but the operators say they wiww give no increase, and the War Labor Board says no increase."

At another point, he expressed the belief that the War Labor Board would not "undertake a decision in conflict with the court decision," indicating that he expects to win by this route. (Informed WLB officials stated that it was theoretically possible to grant an increase on this ground to remove an "inequity.")

Lewis fired considerable ammunition at the United States Steel Corp., quoting from a recent public advertisement of the corporation, summarizing its balance sheet for the past year.

Noting a charge of 128 million dollars for repair and maintenance, he decried it as "highly inflationary."

"United States Steel stands to emerge from this war having paid stockholders current dividends and having rebuilt their plants. Under all ordinary circumstances, they would not have spent 128 million dollars for repair and maintenance."

"Appalling Nonchalance"

When Senators protested that the tax laws were designed to recoup excess industrial profits and that war contracts were subject to renegotiation, Lewis charged, "We are enforcing the tax laws with an appalling nonchalance."

"When you show me that the status quo ante bellum has been maintained for industry," the mine leader shouted, "I will accept the status quo ante bellum for workers."

Senator Ball challenged Lewis anew on his assertion that the miners did not have enough to eat. Lewis produced an analysis of living costs in mining towns which he said showed a 14 per cent rise in the cost of food since August, 1939.

"That is why I say," he told Ball, "that when you call me a demagogue without giving me an opportunity to show this, you are less than a representative of the people."

Miners, Southern Operators Still Deadlocked in Pay Parley

By the Associated Press

New York, March 26.—United Mine workers and Southern Appalachian soft coal operators remained deadlocked today as Northern miners and operators worked on a tabulation of living costs and wage demands to serve as a basis for further negotiations.

The U. M. W. rejected the Southerners' motion to continue negotiations for a new contract without a time limit, as proposed by President Roosevelt. In turn, Southern operators again, after reconsideration, rejected the U. M. W. proposal for a 30-day limit on negotiations.

Both proposals contain clauses making any wage agreements reached in the negotiations retroactive to April 1. The current contract for 450,000 soft coal miners expires next Wednesday.

Northern operators have accepted the 30-day time limit on further negotiations, and the Northern conference was recessed yesterday until Tuesday. The tabulation will be worked out meanwhile.

The Southern Conference was adjourned until tomorrow morning. After today's meeting it was announced that proposals which have been before the negotiators since the meetings began three weeks ago had been discussed fully.

Major U. M. W. demands include a $2 per day wage increase, $8 per day minimum for all who work in the mine fields, unionization of minor bosses and pay from time of entry to time of departure from a mine.

Both Northern and Southern operators have rejected union demands, the Northerners claiming they would cost the mines an additional 750 million dollars. Miners claimed, on the other hand, that the additional cost would be 250 million dollars.

Murray Calls Labor Draft Bill 'Snare'

Terming the Austin-Wadsworth labor draft bill a "dangerous snare," President Philip Murray of the C. I. O. told the Senate Military Committee yesterday that badly planned contract allocations rather than a manpower shortage are largely responsible for war production problems.

In a statement read by Van A. Bittner, assistant to the president of the United Steel Workers of America, Murray said some war plants had expanded labor forces in areas not equipped to handle such concentrations of workers.

In other instances, he added, industry refused to pay adequate wages, or complained of a labor shortage while refusing to hire available Negro workers or women. He blamed "uninformed, inexpert local draft boards" for withdrawing "sorely needed workers in many areas."

Condemns Boards

"If we are struggling with a problem of using our manpower most effectively . . . we will make no constructive contribution if we decide that the thing to do is simply pass a law saying that the local draft boards shall have the power to send men wherever the local board may determine," Murray's statement said.

"It is not only no contribution to pass such a law, it is a dangerous snare and a delusion. Passage of the bill would lull the Nation into a false sense of security with the notion that we had solved our manpower problem when in fact we had not even tackled the problem."

Russ Nixon, Washington representative of the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America, C. I. O., termed the bill a "proposal to apply snap-the-whip, crack-down labor draft compulsions on American labor" at a time when it is an easier task for some, at least, to propose total regimentation for American workers than to eliminate wasteful, nonessential advertising, production of nonessential farm products and luxury industries which eat up valuable manpower and materials."

Big Planes Boost Great Raid Record

London, March 26 (AP).—Thousand-bomber raids on Germany last year served a useful purpose at the time, but the bomber command is accomplishing almost as much now with fewer and larger planes per raid, Air Minister Sir Archibald Sinclair told a meeting at Harrow today in reply to schoolboys' questions.

In the three big raids last May and June, he pointed out, a substantial part of the air armadas were medium bombers.

In each of those raids between 1200 and 1500 tons of bombs were dropped, whereas far smaller forces of larger bombers has loosed "well over a thousand tons" of bombs in recent raids, Sinclair said.

Hitler to Run Navy

New York, March 26 (AP).—The British radio quoted Stockholm reports today as saying Adolf Hitler now plans to run the German navy, whose U-boats are a major threat to the supply lines which the Allies must keep open to invade Europe.

"It has just been announced," said the B. B. C. broadcast as recorded by United States Government monitors, "that Hitler is to take over direction of the German navy, having handed over control of the German army to his generals, according to reports from Stockholm."

Confirmation Of Adm. Land Again Delayed

By Robert De Vore
Post Staff Writer

A surprise uprising among Senate Republicans yesterday caught Administration leaders off guard and forced a second postponement of action on confirmation of Rear Admiral Emory S. Land to succeed himself as chairman of the Maritime Commission.

Maority Leader Barkley and many Democrats were out to lunch when Chairman Bailey of the Commerce Committee moved that the Senate go into executive session to consider Land's renomination.

Normally such a motion would have been approved as a matter of course, but from the Republican side of the aisle came a chorus of noes and Senator Gurney (Republican) of South Dakota, occupant of the chair, ruled that there were more noes than ayes.

The cheering section on the Republican side was led by "freshmen" Senators who have vowed undying opposition to domestic policies of the New Deal. Land also was opposed by Senator McCarran (Democrat) of Nevada.

Senator Barkley came on the floor shortly after the vote was taken. In consultation with Senator Bailey (Democrat) of North Carolina and Senator McNary of Oregon, the Republican leader, an agreement was worked out and accepted by the Senate whereby the re-appointment of Land will be the first order of business after the Senate completes its routine work at the next session Tuesday.

It was agreed that a vote would be taken on the re-nomination not later than 5:30 p. m.

Senator Aiken, who opposed Land about a week ago in a speech in which he held the chairman responsible for allegedly exorbitant wartime profits of ship operators, explained that Senators Ferguson of Michigan and Tobey of New Hampshire (Republicans) wanted to make speeches.

30,000 Idle, Houses Empty In Scranton

By the Associated Press

New York, March 26.—The magazine Iron Age said today that men were looking for women's jobs in Scranton, Pa., so great was the unemployment there.

Crowded war industry centers with their manpower and housing shortages are in sharp contrast with jobless men and empty houses in 82 depressed industrial areas whose neglect by war contractors was called "strange and tragic" by Iron Age.

Listing among such sections Wheeling, Richmond, Steubenville and Zanesville, Ohio, and Kalamazoo, Mich., Iron Age drew this picture of the Scranton area:

With a population of 300,000, it has 30,000 unemployed and 7000 empty houses; more than 20,000 have entered the armed forces, a high percentage; another 20,000 men and women have gone to Bridgeport, Baltimore and other war-busy cities and are sending to their families more than half a million dollars a month.

The Run-Around

Dealing with attempts to get war work for Scranton, Iron Age said a report of the Federal Anthracite Coal Commission had been sent to President Roosevelt, who relayed it to the Army, Navy and War Production Board.

"Since the first of the year letters have been written to 400 officials of the Army, Navy and WPB, setting forth in detail, in many instances with charts and figures, what Scranton has in surplus electric power, labor, sites, transportation, etc.," Iron Age said.

"More than 300 answers have been received and have been examined by a member of the Iron Age staff.

"They provide a postgraduate course in the run-around."

One factory, with 400 men to a shift, was obtained "over strong WPB opposition," Iron Age said.

Meantime Scranton, whose experience is paralleled in many other areas, according to Iron Age, has been able to obtain some additional factories making war and civilian goods.

President Sends Widow Best Wishes; 10 Children Serve

Syracuse, N. Y., March 26 (AP).—President Roosevelt's "very best wishes" have been sent to Mrs. Elizabeth Checkosky, a widow, 10 of whose 12 children are serving their country in the armed services and on the home front.

Five sons are in the Army, Navy and Marine Corps, and three sons and two daughters are war plant workers. A White House note signed by Grace G. Tully, secretary, said the President "well understands the feeling of parental pride which you must feel. . . ."

The text of the letter:

"My dear Mrs. Checkosky:

"The President has recently learned that you are the mother of 12 children, five of whom are serving in the Army, Navy and Marine Corps. We want you to know that he well understands the feeling of parental pride which you must feel in your sons, who are contributing so ably their services, both in the Armed Forces and on the home front, to our Nation in its time of greatest need.

"The President's very best wishes go to you with this little note.

"Very sincerely yours,
GRACE G. TULLY,

and Representative Ditter (Republican) of Pennsylvania.

Doughton and Ditter shouted at each other simultaneously across the aisle that the other was playing politics, while Representative Bulwinkle (Democrat) of North Carolina rapped in vain for order. After the debate Doughton and Ditter shook hands, sat down together and agreed to erase the interchange from the record.

Campaign Fund Bid Charged

The bulk of the political denunciation, however, was turned on the various tax plans themselves.

Representative Dingell (Democrat) of Michigan charged, however, that sponsorship of the Ruml plan was a bid for campaign contributions for the 1944 election.

Dingell said he was "convinced" that the Republicans had "promise of abundant campaign funds" if a year of taxes were abated, but he warned at the same time that a member who voted to "give away" 10 billion dollars could be beaten "to a frazzled edge" in the next election.

Ditter denounced the Ways and Means bill as a "New Deal tax" calculated to drive small income taxpayers into the hands of the loan sharks. Doughton retorted that the collection system of the Ways and Means bill was the same as that in the Carlson bill, and said "I dare you to find a line in the bill that forces anyone into the hands of the loan sharks."

"Socialistic," Says Dewey

Chief attack on what he called the "Treasury, Robertson, Forand, C. I. O. plan," came from Representative Dewey (Republican) of Illinois, who called it "socialistic in character and unfair in principle." He said that the Carlson bill was the only one which "at one stroke" would equitably place taxpayers on a "pay-as-you-earn basis."

Representative McLean (Republican) of New Jersey said he would support the withholding collection plan to obtain passage of the Carlson bill, but pointed out that some paychecks now look "like a bingo board—there are so many squares for deductions," and he raised a question how far the American people would go along with this trend.

Representative Simpson (Republican) of Pennsylvania joined in urging support for the Carlson plan, while Representative Crawford (Republican) of Michigan renewed his previous attack on it. Another Republican, Representative Poulson of California joined the foes of both the Carlson and Doughton bills. Representative Maloney (Democrat) of Louisiana defended the Ways and Means plan.

District's Long-Time Professional Farmers Give Victory Gardeners Horticultural Tips

Raising Things Isn't Easy, Say Those Who Have Been at It Years

By Martha McLean
Post Staff Writer

Growing things to eat in Washington is not the complete innovation this year's tumult about victory gardens might make it seem.

In fact victory garden novices might profit from a bit of advice from the real dirt farmers of the Nation's Capital, men with life-long experience in making land right inside the District produce.

Their number is dwindling but there are still farms in Washington and men who remember when whole areas here were productive farmland.

Take it from them, victory gardeners: Raising things is not easy. But they're willing to share what they've learned the hard way through the years.

Lifetime Farmer

William Heitmuller has been truck farming out Northeast on Sargent Road just beyond Crittenden Street all his life, on land his father farmed before him.

The sharp wheels of his disc barrow made short shrift of the vineythick chick weed this week as he directed his team of mules around the field and the ground he turned over was damp and warm in the late afternoon sunshine.

An office worker might have envied Heitmuller—and might have thought again when told his working day had begun at 7 a. m. and at 6 p. m. was not yet ended.

This year Heitmuller is planting 20 acres in tomatoes, egg plant, cabbage and "about everything." Lettuce and spinach can go out now, he says, but better wait on the tomatoes and egg plant. Frost will rot them, he said, and you can look for frost here up till May 10. Heitmuller has known frost here to remain late as May 15.

Have Farm in District

Mrs. Charles W. Miller lives over the way a bit on Riggs Road. She and Mr. Miller have lived in their well-kept rambling farm home 37 years, and farm 3 acres inside the District, many more in Maryland.

She warns also that there's more to raising food than digging a hole and putting the seed in. Why, Mr. Miller tends his lettuce like a baby," she says.

One inexperienced gardener asked her when to plant rhubarb seed. You don't plant seed for rhubarb. You get the heart of the root, give it much care and then you have rhubarb—the third year.

Tomatoes, cabbages and carrots are easy, she said. And potatoes aren't bad, but seed potatoes—especially for sweets—are high now and hard to get. The commonest fault of new gardeners, says she, is wasting seed—planting much too thick.

Farming has its intricacies, yes. You should know what grew on land the year before, and how well.

It's best to "kill" your turnips. No fooling. Except even that takes real work. You dig a "kill" or kiln—hole in the ground—about Thanksgiving. Put in your turnips. And they don't freeze during the winter.

Poultry Raising Is Being Taught To Servicemen

Servicemen who intend to make a living at raising chickens after the war are being provided with a class of instruction in poultry husbandry by the USO Club at Laurel, Md.

The 10-session course will be taught by George DeWitt Quigley, assistant poultry professor at the University of Maryland. It will include instruction in the choice of breeds, housing, breeding, and the selecting, incubation, feeding and marketing of poultry products. Field trips to the university poultry laboratories and to nearby poultry farms will supplement the classes.

The Laurel USO Club is operated by the National Catholic Community Center.

said, and has allocated large quantities of steel to all producers.

In the executive order setting up the administration, the Food Distribution Administration and the Food Production Administration, the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Extension Service were consolidated under Davis.

FCA Remains Wickard's

The Farm Credit Administration, which previously had been part of FDA, however, was left under the jurisdiction of Secretary Wickard.

In some respects, farm leaders pointed out, the new arrangement is reminiscent of the Knudsen-Hillman dual authority which existed in the old Office of Production Management.

Charles C. Teague, president of the National Council of Farmer Cooperative, last night declared he could not see that the executive order vested all food authority in one place. "The order does not, so far as I can see, give Mr. Davis any more authority than Wickard had," he said.

Edward A. O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, who declared himself gratified at the Davis appointment, declared: "But I hope he will be given greater leeway than was given Secretary Wickard and be free from the obstacle of conflicting administrative authority which have confronted Wickard."

Says He Must Control Prices

"He must have control of food prices if he is to maintain food production," O'Neal said.

"All production, distribution and pricing of food should be headed under one authority," Teague declared.

President Roosevelt said the immediate concern of Davis would be the marshalling of a "land army" to feed America and her Allies. He said that hundreds of thousands of farmers already had been deferred in the draft and that eventually there would be an exempted-from-service land army of three million persons. In addition to these, he said, workers would be recruited from the cities and schools to raise and harvest large victory crops.

A Senate appropriations subcommittee yesterday continued hearings on the House-approved bill to furnish the Extension Service $26,100,000 with which to recruit and train farm labor for this year.

May Use War Prisoners

Senator Thomas (Democrat) of Oklahoma, said a proposal to make the money available directly to the States is under consideration. As the bill was passed by the House, $13,500,000 of the amount would be divided among extension service bureaus in the various States and $12,500,000 would be for use by the United State Employment Service in moving migrant workers across State lines.

No Congressman will admit to a labor surplus in his own State and most of them resent the idea that any agency would take away laborers to other sections. Especially do Southern members oppose plans to "lure" their workers away to higher-paying regions.

Some of the money would go to importation of Mexicans, Bahamians and Haitians for farm work. Senator Thomas said the labor situation was so critical there was possibility war prisoners would be used on farms in great numbers, and certainly, that the prisons of this country will supply farm workers.

the way "and start on a farm program."

Although now disdaining Secretary of Agriculture Wickard's plan to offer farmers additional incentive payments for raising war crops, many are confident this will be done eventually. For the Administration agrees with them that the farmers should have more money to cover their additional costs and risks—but does not want this reflected in added costs to consumers.

Mayor LaGuardia Will Be General

Mayor F. H. LaGuardia of New York City is shortly to be commissioned in the Army as a brigadier general, it was reported last night in authoritative circles. It is understood that he will report to Governors Island next week for physical examination and that if he passes this test, President Roosevelt will send his nomination to the Senate.

Although complete secrecy about the affairs is being maintained in official circles, it is believed that Mayor LaGuardia will be sent to Africa.

tion of rats. The committee asked also for the method used in determining locations and the number of workers now assigned to the job.

Kutz was requested not only to furnish the maps showing how privies might be connected but also asked the approximate cost of connecting these privies and the amount of pipe required.

There was every indication that the committee was determined upon getting rid of every privy in Washington as soon as possible.

Meanwhile, however, housing authorities here pointed out last night that mere public listing of slum owners, a listing which changes from week to week, would not be sufficient to compel improvement.

It was pointed out that the slum problem has two phases, authority to compel slum owners to make necessary repairs, and a program whereby condemned dwellings may be replaced.

Last year hearings were held by the subcommittee on a housing code for the District of Columbia, a code which would set standards for new dwellings, set standards—lower standards of course—for existing structures, and provide for the operation and maintenance of dwellings under a housing officer.

The housing code, sponsored by the Washington Housing Association, failed of adoption last year, partly because of a feeling that existing laws were sufficient.

There are, however, according to the association and other authorities here, loopholes in existing legislation which permit slum owners to maintain the kind of premises which so disturbed touring Congressmen last Thursday.

Many situations in Washington, brought to the attention of the subcommittee, are beyond the legal powers of the District officials, authorities said, but adoption of a strong housing code would give officials the authority to compel owners to make necessary repairs.

Since enforcement of proper standards would result in the abandonment or condemnation of some property, a program of building by a Federal agency like the Alley Dwelling Authority goes hand in hand with such enforcement. Revenues of the Alley Dwelling Authority have been cut sharply by Congress in the last four years.

Alaska-Orient Commercial Air Route Proposed

St. Paul, March 26 (AP).—Croil Hunter, president of Northwest Airlines, announced today that initial steps have been taken to establish an all-American commercial air route from Seattle, Wash., to Alaska and thence to the Orient.

The proposed route would be an extension of the present Northwest system between Chicago, the Twin Cities and Seattle. It would run from Seattle to Anchorage and Nome, Alaska, and then to Manila, Peiping, Shanghai and Chungking, ending in Calcutta, India.

Concurrently, the airline is also amending an existing application for a Washington-Twin Cities-Fairbanks, Alaska, route to extend it to Nome. It also proposes an alternate route on the Twin Cities-Fairbanks leg via McMurray and Norman Wells, Canada, and Fort Yukon, Alaska, which would be fuel stops.

woman trying to kill me." He let her in and she called her attorney. Sheriffs' officers found her shortly thereafter.

Ownership of a small-caliber pistol had not been settled, but Simmons said he was sure in his own mind the weapon belonged to Mrs. Simmons.

Simmons, a wealthy oil operator who arrived shortly after the shooting, was unnerved and unable to make a promised statement to officers. He did say, however, he hadn't seen either Mrs. Howard nor his wife yesterday. The shooting was late yesterday.

Mrs. Howard was described as quiet and living a secluded life in an exclusive residential neighborhood of Forth Worth. Her home is only a few blocks from that of Mrs. W. G. Lackey, jr., daughter of Mrs. Simmons.

Bakers' Boss Admits He Paid Them $191,000

By Francis J. Connor
Washington Bureau of Chicago Sun

Added to the "wonders" of the world yesterday were:

The wonderment of Mrs. Katherine A. Baker, partner of a war broker who last year split a clear $68,000 in commissions with her husband on contracts calling for exclusive service to the Navy on hair mattresses.

She angrily asserted to a House Naval Affairs Committee that it "made my husband and me wonder if we were living in the United States," when, as she charged, the current counsel for the committee, while an assistant to the Undersecretary of the Navy, threatened to have her husband, W. Lester Baker, put on a straight salary basis by his company, and that the company would be taken over by the Navy. The counsel denied the charge.

Bradley Wonders, Too

But immediately, Representative Michael J. Bradley (Democrat, Pennsylvania), a committee member, interjected:

"I wonder where else in the world could you make all this money from a government?"

What Alfred Schlegel, the boss of Mrs. Baker's husband, was wondering about when the committee concluded interrogating him was a matter of conjecture. But under the insinuating inquiry of committee members, Schlegel had admitted, much to his visible embarrassment, that:

In 1942 he paid the Bakers $191,000 . . . "which is a lot of money, and possibly we paid them more than their services warranted," and, "I don't think a man is worth that."

Schlegel further stated that, "I could not afford to pay it on a salary basis," and in the same breath that, "if we did not have a contract (with a commission clause and signed 10 years ago) I would not have paid them that much."

Subsequently, he said, his company paid $250,000 in taxes last year, which left it with about 50,000 or less than the $68,000 net the Bakers came out with.

Had to Pay Bakers

Schlegel, top salaried man in his company, is the $21,000-a-year-treasurer of Fleetwood Craftsmen, Inc., which has contracts to supply the Navy with five million dollars worth of hair mattresses.

He admitted under the questioning of committee chairman Carl Vinson (Democrat) of Georgia, that the Navy had requested reduction in prices, but that he had to refuse the Navy's plea because he had to pay the Bakers such cozy commissions. With the Bakers, his sales agents in the Capital, out of the picture, Schlegel said he could have saved the Navy, as well as himself, some money.

With the Navy directing such an exclusive volume of business his way, Chairman Vinson inquired whether Schlegel now needed a a sales agent.

Schlegel contended: "I don't know." But obviously he was wondering.

Such were the sequences of the committee's second day of striving to perfect a process whereby Congress can curb alleged excessive profits realized by commission agents in obtaining war contracts for a countrywide clientele. The committee's announced intention is to ask Congress to classify the agents as "subcontractors," and give authority to the Navy Department to renegotiate downward the agents' profits in excess of $25,000.

Willow Run Homes Asked By President

Copyright by Chicago Sun

A shortage of housing within convenient distance of the Ford Motor Company's bomber plant at Willow Run was mentioned by President Roosevelt yesterday as the primary cause for the failure as far of production to attain anticipated figures.

The President said he had brought up the subject recently when the Mayor of Detroit visited the White House to give him a check for the infantile paralysis fund, and that, since then, a board of service representatives and civilian industrialists had been meeting in the Detroit area to survey the problem of increasing Willow Run's bomber production.

Mr. Roosevelt said that as a result of their conversations with officials in charge of materials priorities, transportation and other factors entering into the situation, he thought more housing would soon be provided in the neighborhood of the plant. Many workers now are obliged to travel an hour to get to their jobs, and another hour to reach their homes each day, the President added. These travel difficulties had discouraged some workers from taking jobs available at Willow Run.

A reporter spoke of reports in Detroit that the production set-up at Willow Run had been so rigid that it had had to be modified, and that this also had cut down production. Mr. Roosevelt said his understanding was that such changes as the lessons of combat were constantly bringing about in plane construction and equipment were being made at the 30 modification centers around the country to which newly built aircraft are taken from the factories.

This system, begun last July, had proved a time-saver, he said, and the decision of experts had been that it slowed down production less than would be the case if the production line was upset each time innovations were introduced or other changes made.

The average plane, fresh from the factory, was held up about a month at modification centers, the President said.

Machinists' Union Threatens to Quit A. F. of L.

By Joseph A. Loftus
Associated Press Staff Writer

The International Association of Machinists, third largest union in the American Federation of Labor, is threatening to withdraw as a result of a long-standing jurisdictional row with William L. Hutcheson's Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners.

The dispute is over which union is entitled to do certain work, such as the erection and installation of machinery.

It would be the first major defection from the A. F. of L. since the typographical group quit paying its per capita tax in 1940.

Ballots have been mailed to all I. A. M. lodges for a referendum on the issue at April meetings. I. A. M. officials said a majority of "yes" votes would not mean automatic withdrawal from the federation but would empower the executive council to withdraw at its discretion.

The machinists union claim 535,000 members and has been paying per capita tax to the federation on 350,000 members. This amounts to $5000 a month in revenue for the A. F. of L. on the basis of a cent and one-half per member per month for the first 300,000 members and a cent per capita for all over 300,000.

The carpenters, who paid per capita on 366,700 members last fiscal year and is now reported to be paying on 600,000, or $7500 per month. Daniel J. Tobin's Brotherhood of Teamsters is credited with being the No. 1 union in the federation, paying on more than 500,000 members last fiscal year.

Harvey W. Brown,, international president of the machinists, contends the carpenters have been encroaching on the machinists' jurisdiction. Brown says an A. F. L. convention decision is on his side, but that Hutcheson, a power in A. F. L. councils, has been able to get the executive council to "misinterpret" the decision by threatening to withdraw the carpenters. Both Hutcheson and Brown are A. F. L. vice presidents and members of the executive council.

The source of the controversy goes back to 1914, when an A. F. L. convention defined the machinists' work jurisdiction. The machinists contend that A. F. L. President William Green was under convention mandate to so advise any employer or contractor of that jurisdiction on request but that since 1938 the A. F. L. executive council has prohibited Green from sending out this information to employers.

As a result, the machinists say, not only the carpenters but the operating engineers have been taking advantage of this situation to "raid" the machinists jurisdiction.

Sixteen Police Are Promoted In Washington

Sixteen promotions in the Police Department were approved by the Commissioners yesterday acting on recommendations made by Police Chief Edward J. Kelly.

Permanent status as headquarters detective sergeant was given to temporary sergeants Charles T. Williams, Harold C. Huffman and Albert L. Embrey, while temporary precinct detectives William J. Webb, Albert B. Hitt, and Alfred D. Clarke were given permanent ranking.

Temporary Sergt. Francis W. Marple was given a permanent sergeancy and Pvt. Clarence Morgan was promoted to temporary sergeant.

Precinct Detectives Otto P. Fuss, Francis L. Gaver, John B. Layton and Joseph H. Hunt were assigned to temporary duty in the Detective Bureau, with an additional annual pay of $600. Pvts. Clyde O. Rouse, Melvin M. Kite, Robert G. Kirby and Edner J. Scott were given temporary assignments as precinct detectives, with pay raises of $240 per year.

The orders all are effective April 1.

Air-Cooled Sub, Navy's Latest, 'Honey' to Men

By John Moroso 3d
United Press Staff Writer

Aboard America's Newest Submarine, March 26.—This sleek submarine—designed solely to help send Japan's naval and merchant fleet into oblivion—is a honey.

WALKER

Comparing a submarine of this type with the old C-boats, O-boats and S-boats is like comparing the Normandie with a weather-beaten old freighter.

This submarine cost six million dollars, plus the cost of materials and equipment added by the Navy.

She was a slender, beautiful weapon of war, black and glistening in the coldish sun. Her skipper, Lieut. Comdr. Ralph C. Lynch, jr., a native of New York City, was conducting an inspection tour, and the executive officer, Lieut. Comdr. William Warren Walker, 32, a native of Toppenish, Wash., and a resident of Arlington, Va., showed me around the boat.

Has Ten Torpedo Tubes

This sub's ten torpedo tubes—six forward and four aft—make her two and a half times more dangerous than some of the submarines we started fighting with.

On the surface this ship displaces 1500 tons, has a speed of more than 20 knots.

She is more than 300 feet long, and is a stream-lined craft that beats anything yet produced by the United States.

Contrasting her with our old submarines, she has these features:

Air-conditioning—believe it or not, it works.

Superior refrigeration — new compartments make it possible to store fresh foods for long trips.

Washing machines that produce clean, dry clothes.

Sun lamps to bake men who often go many weeks without seeing the sun.

Shower baths for officers and men—a novelty even on some surface ships.

Toilets for both officers and men.

Of Stainless Steel

These submarines are mostly stainless steel—bright and clean. They have built-in radios and phonographs and they have built-in libraries. The Navy has seen that its sub men get everything possible to make them comfortable.

Shortly after we got under way, Skipper Lynch gave this order over the ship's loudspeaker system: "Rig for diving."

We went down moments later to the tune of the harsh noise made by venting tanks. At 75 feet we leveled off, and went through a series of drills—collision drill, fire drill and abandon ship drill.

The sub operated so smoothly that it was hard to tell that we were under the water. Only a slight, hardly noticeable, pressure told us that we were down.

I was surprised by the youth of the crew and officers, and by the various places they hailed from. Our gunnery officer, Lieut. H. J. Greene, 26, came from Bay City, Mich. Greene served aboard the submarine Argonaut, and he left her three weeks before she was sunk by Japanese destroyers. Two Jap merchant ships were destroyed by the Argonaut while Greene was aboard.

Youthful Officers

Ensign William Ross Banks, 20, communications officer, is a native of Oklahoma City. Ens. Norman Leigh Sorenson, 32, calls Detroit his home, although he now lives at Saybrook, Conn., when he is ashore.

Chief Engineer William L. Kitch, 28, a lieutenant, gives his address as San Carlos, Ariz.

The impressive thing about these officers and men is their efficiency and calmness. Every man aboard is required to learn the duties of every other man.

One single slip during a dive could mean death to all aboard.

After a series of underwater maneuvers we surfaced and at 1 a. m. started firing at an illuminated target set up in a restricted area. Our deck gun blinded us as it roared away in the freezing darkness. Other deck guns chattered, and it was pleasant to go below after the shooting.

We had planned to fire torpedoes at a target ship, but this was canceled because of rough water. The retrieving ship said she could not recover our torpedoes, so we decided not to risk wasting missiles that now cost between $12,000 to $15,000.

Our submarine men are enthusiastic about this new boat.

"The comparison is like that between a model T and a Cadillac," one officer said.

German Tank Superiority a 'Myth,' Says U. S. Army Experts

By William F. Frye
Associated Press Staff Writer

Chester Tank Depot, Chester, Pa., March 26.—The widely heralded superiority of German armored equipment is a myth, army ordnance officers asserted here today.

Even the celebrated German 88 mm. combination antitank and antiaircraft gun is obsolete, said Brig. Gen. Julian S. Hatcher, chief of field service for the ordnance department, and the German trap which destroyed a large number of British tanks in Libya last summer was successful because it was a well-placed trap—not because of any inherent superiority of the 88.

Brig. Gen. John K. Christmas, head of the tank automotive center at Detroit, added that "the German vehicles we have—and we have a lot of captured German stuff—doesn't exhibit anything that makes for superiority."

"They just had a helluva lot of them," said Christmas, "and used them aggressively—which is the way to use any equipment."

Their counterclaim that American equipment actually was superior to German tanks and guns, brought prompt agreement from Maj. F. F. Duerth, British army representative at the tank depot here.

"The success of the Eighth Army's push across Libya and Tripolitania," said Duerth, "was due very largely to the American equipment which was received over there.

"We regard the M-4 as the most valuable and the most handy general utility tank we are getting."

The discussion followed a visit to the tank depot, where about 4000 armored vehicles of all types are undergoing modification and receiving their final equipment before shipment to combat zones. This is not a static number, since the depot is shipping out about 200 vehicles a day from the 30 types that are handled here—tanks of all sizes, half-track scout cars and troop carriers, armored cars, and self-propelled artillery. Among the latter are the tank destroyers and a new 155 mm. gun, the most powerful self-propelled artillery in the world.

Chester, the largest of four tank-modification centers in the United States, is operated by the Ford Motor Co., and occupies what formerly was Ford's export assembly plant.

Armored vehicles manufactured by 18 companies are sent here for installation of radios, some of the machine guns and other equipment, as well as for minor changes dictated by battlefield experience but not requiring a change in the manufacturing process.

Equipment is shipped with spare parts for maintenance for an entire year—in "sets" for 100 vehicles, or "quarter sets" for 25. In the case of the M-4 Sherman medium tank, a quarter set of maintenance spare parts comprises 3800 separate items, weighs about 250,000 pounds, and requires three freight cars to ship.

ODT Order Slows Circus Trains

The song of the calliope will be heard again in the land this year, the Government having decided that circus trains may roll once more.

But the war is still the greatest show on earth, and the Office of Defense Transportation hedged its permission yesterday with a ringmasterlike announcement that circus train travel will have to be an aftershow to "all other train movements, whether freight, passenger or mixed freight and passenger movements."

Trinity Church To Dedicate Service Flag

Folowing the delivery of the sermon on "The Certainty of Our Salvation," the Rev. H. M. Hennig will dedicate a service flag tomorrow at 11 a. m. at Trinity Lutheran Church, Fourth and E Streets Northwest. Thirty-six blue stars, symbols of those young men of the congregation who are now in the country's armed forces, appear on a background of red silk, 5 feet by 3 feet in size, which has a white center and a blue border. This flag was donated by the Ladies Aid and was sewed by hand by Mrs. W. Foster, a member of the society.

"Redemption from Sin" will be the topic of the Lenten sermon to be delivered by the Rev. Mr. Hennig at 8 p. m. Open house for servicemen and all young people will be held at 9 o'clock the same evening, immediately following the service.

Red Cross workers will meet Wednesday at 10:30 a. m.

The choir will rehearse Wednesday at 8 p. m.

The Ladies Aid will have a business meeting Thursday at 1 p. m.

The Walther League will hold a business meeting at 8 o'clock Thursday night. All Walther Leaguers and visiting servicemen are asked to meet at Sixteenth and Kennedy Streets Northwest, tomorrow afternoon, to go hiking.

Dr. Adams to Talk Here Tomorrow

Dr. Earl Frederick Adams, general director, Council on Finance and Promotion of the Northern Baptist Convention, New York City, will be the guest preacher at Calvary Baptist Church tomorrow. His morning subject will be "Some Marks of a Christian in Today's World," and the evening, "No Spiritual Dim-Out." The minister, Dr. Cranford, is in Richmond, Va., where he will occupy his former pulpit at Second Baptist Church in the morning and at the First Church in the evening.

Ensign Ted Jollay will conduct the Junior Church service tomorrow morning while Mr. Tuller presides at the morning church service.

The Sunday school teachers will hold their dinner meeting followed by the Bible course on Wednesday evening preceeding the midweek prayer service.

Webber to Give Recital At N. Y. Avenue Church

The first recital on the Skinner organ will be given Tuesday at 8 p. m. at the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church by Thomas H. Webber, jr., organist at the Idlewild Presbyterian Church of Memphis, Tenn. His program will include "Clair de Lune" by Karg-Elert, "Variations on a Noel" by Dupre, "Arise, Arise" by Mason, "The Citadel at Quebec" by Russell, "Elegy" by Peeters, and the "Idyll" by Baumgartner. Admission is free and the public is cordially invited.

Cathedral Preachers Announced

The Rev. Albert T. Mollegan, associate professor in New Testament ethics and the history of religion at Virginia Theological Seminary in Alexandria, will preach at the 4 o'clock evensong service tomorrow in Washington cathedral.

Mr. Mollegan is the second of four members of the Seminary faculty who will preach in the cathedral on Sunday afternoons during Lent.

A graduate of Mississippi State College, Virginia Seminary and Union Theological Seminary in New York, Mr. Mollegan formerly was rcetor at St. Paul's Episcopal Church in Meridian, Miss.

The Rev. Theodore O. Wedel, cathedral canon and warden of the College of Preachers, will preach at the 11 o'clock service of morning prayer tomorrow, and again at the 8 o'clock evening service in the crossing of the cathedral.

The latter will be the third of a special series of Lenten services featuring congregational singing, led by members of the Cathedral Choral Society.

Following the custom of observing "State Sundays" in the cathedral, the 11 o'clock service tomorrow will honor the State of Ohio. The State flag will be carried in the procession and prayers will be said for the State. Residents of Congress from the State are especially invited.

Ruth Mitchell to Describe German Prison Experiences

National City Church Will Hear General's Sister

Miss Ruth Mitchell, sister of the famous Army general, Billy Mitchell, will be the special featured speaker in the Youth Day observance tomorrow at the National City Christian Church. The noted speaker will give a graphic story of her experiences in 11 different German prisons. Miss Mitchell is the only American woman to ever belong to the famous Chetnik organization. The Chetniks have constantly worked in an underground way against Hitler and Nazism. They are largely responsible for many of the difficulties he is having in the Balkan countries today. Miss Mitchell will be heard at 7 o'clock Sunday evening in the church's main sanctuary. Following Miss Mitchell's talk, a social and tea will be enjoyed in the Vermont Avenue building.

Many young people of the church will participate in the special Youth Sunday morning service at 10:50 a. m. The theme for the meeting is "Youth Looks to Christ." Speakers are Miss Dorothy Valentine, William Adams and Dr. J. Warren Hastings. Other young people who will participate in the service are Mr. Paul Lippolt, Miss Nina Moser, and Mr. Aute Carr. The public is cordially invited to both of these services.

Petworth Baptist young people have virtually completed plans for their observance of "Youth Week" from April 18 to 25, when the principal speaker will be the Rev. W. G. Stracener, well known Florida youth leader.

The junior high school group of Chevy Chase Presbyterian Church tomorrow at 6:30 p. m. will launch a discussion series on "Making Your Life Count." with Mrs. Philip Randall leading the opening discussion on "Christian Service Through the Life Work We Choose."

MISS RUTH MITCHELL, who will address "Youth Day" observance at National City Christian Church

The Rev. Owen E. Osborne of Mitchellville, Md., sponsor of the Washington East Methodist District Youth Fellowship, will address the Youth Fellowship of Rhode Island Avenue Methodist Church tomorrow at 6:30 p. m. on "A Military Secret . . . Revealed," and will address the church's worship service at 8 p. m. on "Our Besetting Sins."

"The World We Want to Live In," a film which has been shown before thousands of young people throughout the United States, and has been produced by the National Conference of Christians and Jews, will be presented tomorrow at 7 p. m. at the Young Adult Evening Fellowship group of Mount Vernon Place Methodist Church, Ninth and Massachusetts Avenue Northwest.

Church Flag To Honor 68 In Service

The congregation of Rhode Island Avenue Methodist Church, First and Rhode Island Avenue Northwest, led by the Rev. E. A. Sexsmith, tomorrow at 12 p. m. will raise a service flag on the church lawn—honoring its 68 men and women in our armed forces.

A number of servicemen and servicewomen home on furlough are expected to participate in the exercises that will follow the morning worship service, when Dr. Sexsmith will preach on "Christian Beliefs About Man," second in a Lenten sermon series on "Christian Beliefs."

Members of the congregation and the choir and lay leaders of the church are expected to join in a procession after the morning service to the scene of the flag-raising ceremony.

Metropolitan Sermon Series By Dr. Ball

Dr. John Compton Ball, pastor of the Metropolitan Baptist Church, Sixth and A Streets Northeast, will begin a series of pre-Easter sermons tomorrow, the evening topic being "Thy Will Be Done." There will be special music, and the hand of fellowship will be given to several new members.

In the evening the Rev. John M. Ballbach will preach his second in a series of sermons on "The Seven Last Words of Christ on the Cross."

Monday at 7:30 p. m., the special Easter chorus will meet for rehearsal with Mr. Kalehoff, the church organist. The revival prayer band will meet in the live-wire room at 7:30 p. m.

Tuesday at 7 p. m. the "Through the Bible Class" will meet with Mrs. Hasker.

WHEN THE CHURCH TURNED PAGAN

WHY IS SANTA CLAUS CONNECTED WITH CHRISTMAS AND CHRIST'S BIRTHDAY?

WHY IS SANTA CLAUS SUPPOSED TO COME FROM THE NORTH POLE WITH REINDEERS AND COME DOWN THE CHIMNEY AT CHRISTMAS TIME?

WHY DO WE HAVE RABBITS AND EGGS CONNECTED WITH CHRIST'S RESURRECTION AT EASTER TIME?

WHY DOES EASTER COME THE FIRST SUNDAY AFTER THE FIRST NEW MOON AFTER THE VERNAL EQUINOX?

"Indeed we shall find that when Christianity . . . took the place of paganism it assumed in a great degree the forms and titles of paganism and participated in no small measure of its spirit. Christianity as it existed in the Dark Ages might be termed, without much impropriety of language, BAPTIZED PAGANISM."
—Wharey's Church History, p. 24.

"Not a few pagan habits crept into the Church concealed by new names."
—Schaff's Church History.

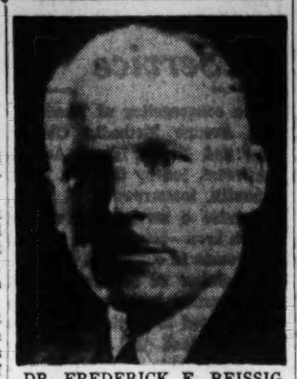
It Takes Courage Today to Be A Christian, Dr. Reissig Says

Religion Does Not Offer Security Speaker Reminds



DR. FREDERICK E. REISSIG

Dr. Frederick E. Reissig, Federation of Churches' executive secretary, yesterday told Lenten worshipers that it is dangerous to be a Christian today.

"The Christian religion does not offer physical security," he said at Southeast Lenten services at the Penn Theater. "In fact, it holds out to Christ's followers a life of insecurity and danger.

"We are discovering again that it is highly dangerous to be a Christian. The early Christians knew that and many Christians of Germany and Norway know it now. Keep your distance from Christianity if you want to play safe.

"Peter, after the capture of Jesus in the Garden of Gethsemane, followed afar off because of the danger of that hour," continued Dr. Reissig. "All too many Christians have followed this policy ever since. The Christian Church will become a power to reshape life only as we forget ourselves and danger and follow the Master of life at close range. The call of this day is for those who would lead dangerous lives."

Services Planned

Meanwhile, a number of other interesting services are planned for tomorrow, the third Sunday in Lent, and for the coming week.

The noonday preacher at the Church of the Epiphany from Monday through Friday will be the Rev. Samuel Shoemaker, rector of Calvary Church, New York City. Mr. Shoemaker has been a preacher now for several Lents at Epiphany and has a large following here.

Born in Baltimore, Md., Mr. Shoemaker is a graduate of Princeton and the General Theological Seminary, New York City. He took postgraduate work at the Union Theological Seminary and after serving two years with the International Y. M. C. A. in Pekin, China, he became secretary of the Philadelphian Society of Princeton in 1920, leaving in 1925 to become the rector of Calvary Church. Through his preaching and books he has become an internationally well-known character and for a good many years was the leader in the Oxford Group Movement, but in 1941 announced his separation from that organization. He is the author of 16 books on various religious topics and is in demand as a college and university speaker throughout the country.

In addition to preaching noondays, Mr. Shoemaker will also preach at 5:30 p. m. Wednesday.

Upper Sixteenth Street churches will hold joint Lenten rites Thursday at 8 p. m. at Hamline Methodist Church, Sixteenth and Allison Streets Northwest. The Rev. Newton D. Simmons, pastor of Highlands Baptist Church, will speak.

Joint Services

Mount Pleasant Congregational and Universalist National Memorial congregations will join in Lenten services Thursday at 8 p. m. at the latter place, Sixteenth and S Streets Northwest, with Dr. Fred S. Buschmeyer, Mount Pleasant pastor, leading meditations.

Dr. Clarence W. Cranford, pastor of Calvary Baptist Church, will address a Lenten program Wednesday at 12 p. m. at Chevy Chase Junior College. Dr. Peter Marshall, pastor of New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, will speak Thursday at the same hour.

Union Lenten services of local and nearby Lutheran congregations will be held Monday at 8 p. m. at historic Luther Place Memorial Church, Thomas Circle, where the speaker will be Dr. S. C. Michelfelder, pastor of St. Paul's Lutheran Church, Toledo, Ohio. Luther Place Church will hold its weekly Lenten services Wednesday at 7:30 p. m., when the Rev. L. Ralph Tabor will continue his series on "The Lord's Prayer."

Speakers at the coming week's daily noonday Lenten services of Southeast churches at the Penn Theater, 850 Pennsylvania Avenue Southeast, follow:

Monday, Dr. Howard Stone Anderson, First Congregational Church; Tuesday, the Rev. Grace Patch Faus, First Divine Science Church; Wednesday, the Rev. Chauncey C. Day, Wilson Memorial Methodist Church; Thursday, Dr. John W. Rustin, Mount Vernon Place Methodist Church, and Friday, Dr. William L. Darby, president of Washington City Bible Society.

Luther League Holds Parley Tomorrow

The fourth annual convention of the Potomac Federation of Luther Leagues of the American Lutheran Churches of Washington and vicinity will be held tomorrow in Takoma Lutheran Church, Seventh and Dahlia Streets Northwest, the Rev. J. Adrian Pfeiffer, pastor, beginning at 3 p. m.

The theme for the convention will be "Our Part in a Christian Peace." Subjects to be discussed are "The Individual's Part," "The Nation's Part" and "The International Part." Mrs. Miriam Knauss, Miss Esther Schwarze and Miss Helen Miller, all of Grace Lutheran Church, will be the speakers.

A business meeting will be held later in the afternoon and supper will be served at the church. In the evening, Vincent Gingerich, president of the Eastern District Luther Leagues of the American Lutheran Church, will present a sermon on the subject, "The Time for Complacency is Past—the Time for Christian Accomplishment is Now." The Rev. Mr. Pfeiffer, pastor of Takoma Lutheran Church and chaplain of the Potomac Federation, will conduct the liturgical service. Fred Winkelman is president of the organization.

At the Takoma morning service the Rev. Mr. Pfeiffer will speak on the subject, "The God of the Second Psalm." At the Wednesday evening Lenten service, to be held at 8 o'clock, the Rev. Mr. Pfeiffer will present the fourth in a series of sermons entitled "People I'll Meet at the Cross." Wednesday's sermon is entitled "I'll Meet a Mother."

Miss Redelstein To Speak Sunday

Elizabeth Redelstein, formerly nurse and companion to Mme. Chiang Kai-shek, will be the speaker tomorrow at 8 p. m. in the Covenant-First Presbyterian Church. Her subject will be, "The Spiritual Life of Mme. Chiang Kai-shek."

First Lieut. Alexander Drysdale of the Fifty-fourth Pursuit Squadron, on furlough from Kiska, Alaska, will participate in the service. Lieutenant Drysdale is the son of Mr. and Mrs. James M. Drysdale of Washington and is one of three sons who have served in the Army Air Corps. One brother, William, was killed in the drive on Tunis, North Africa, in December. The other brother, Douglass, is now in training as a pilot.

Shortage of Ushers

The Ushers' Guild of the Presbyterian Church of the Pilgrim, Twenty-second and P Streets Northwest, recently held its quarterly dinner meeting. Problems of finding an adequate supply of ushers during the present shortage of men, and the likely increasing scarcity of them as the war continues, were discussed.

MUSIC HATH CHARMS . . .

Many church choral and instrumental groups are busily preparing for special Palm Sunday and Easter programs. The newly organized warworkers' orchestra (above) at Foundry Methodist Church, Sixteenth and P Streets Northwest, is shown rehearsing under the conductorship of Raymond Wright, standing near piano. Below—The Chancel Choir of Metropolitan Presbyterian Church, Fourth and B Streets Southeast, presented a Lenten concert in colonial costumes Wednesday night

Sacred Concert to Be Given Tonight

At the National Tabernacle, 6440 Piney Branch Road Northwest, the nationally famous Musical Ambassadors, noted musicians, oil paint artists and vocalists will present a sacred concert today at 8 p. m. During the evening the Musical Ambassadors will perform on orchestra bells, musical saws, cow bells, golden saxophones, banjos, ukuleles, converted whisky bottles and musical pitchforks.

The Musical Ambassadors will be heard in three great services on Sunday at 11 a. m., 3 p. m., and 8 p. m. Some of the messages will be illustrated by oil paintings, painted in eight to twelve minutes during the services. These genuine oil paintings will be given free to the person bringing the most people to the meetings. There is no admission charge to any of these services. All seats are free.

Liotard Sermon at 4 P. M.

"La Foi Perseverante" will be the subject of the sermon by the Rev. Andre F. Liotard at the French service at St. John's Episcopal Church tomorrow at 4 p. m. On Thursday evening from 7:30 to 8:15 Mr. Lotard will hold the fourth in a series of Lenten services in French.

Catholic Relief Appeal Set For April 4

An appeal for funds to continue its work among homeless and starving peoples of Poland, Greece, China, Belgium, Malta and other countries will be made April 4 in Catholic churches throughout the country, the American bishops' war emergency and relief committee announced yesterday through the National Catholic Welfare Conference.

More than $1,322,000 was distributed by the bishops' committee last year to needy of all races and creeds in war-torn countries. Suffering peoples around the world received assistance through established Catholic channels. Of the sum distributed, about $650,000 was disbursed by Pope Pius XII out of two allotments made by the bishops. As a neutral agent, his holiness was able to provide food, clothing and other materials for Americans in Axis internment camps as well as for American prisoners of war.

Among others aided were distressed populations of the Netherlands, Yugoslavia, Lithuania and France, as well as Polish refugees in Russia and the Middle East, Czech refugees in France and children of Finland.

The fund also was used to finance (1) religious and recreational welfare work among United States soldiers overseas; (2) the work of the Chaplains' Aid Society; (3) distressed citizens of Hawaii; (4) Montezuma Seminary in New Mexico, where Mexican candidates for the priesthood are trained, and (5) work of the Military Ordinariate.

Senator Burton to Speak at All Souls'

Senator Harold H. Burton of Ohio will address the Current Problems Class at All Souls Unitarian Church tomorrow at 10 a. m. on "A Wartime Congress." Before the Comparative Religion Class at the same hour, Ivo de Capet will speak on "The Eternal Religion."

The Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D.D., announces a course of three sermons on "What Can I Believe?" for the 11 o'clock services. The subject this Sunday is "Have We Outgrown Religion?" In the afternoon at 5 o'clock Lewis Atwater, organist, will be assisted in a program of French music by George Irving Chandler, tenor. At 5:30 Beatrice Pinkney Jones, piano-diseuse, will give the last of a series of nineteenth century piano sketches, "Edward MacDowell, Celtic Dreamer." Mrs. Edwin Lewis and Miss Frances Ball will be hostesses at the Fellowship Tea at 6 o'clock. The feature at the concluding motion picture hour at 7:30 will be "A Dispatch From Reuters."

Dr. Miller Guest At Nat'l Memorial

Dr. A. W. Miller will be the guest preacher at the National Memorial Church of God, Sixteenth and Taylor Streets Northwest, in a two-week evangelistic campaign beginning tomorrow and continuing through April 11. Services will be held each evening except Saturday at 8 o'clock.

Dr. Miller served for many years as missionary to Japan and is now acting as secretary to the Board of Foreign Missions of the Church of God in Anderson, Ind. He is also professor of Missions and New Testament in the Anderson Theological Seminary. Dr. Miller will use as his subject Sunday morning, "What Does It Mean to Be a Christian Today?"

Miss Helen Wright from Mansfield, Ohio, will direct gospel hymn singing each evening. The old hymns of the church will be used.

There will be a personal conference hour preceding each evening service from 7 to 7:45.

To Install Members

Members of the church school staff at the Takoma Park Presbyterian Church, Maple and Tulip Avenues, will be installed at the 8 p. m. Lenten service. Following the address there will be an informal discussion.

'Church Turned Pagan,' Topic

The second lecture of the series, "When the Church Turned Pagan," will be given tomorrow night in the Bible Auditorium, corner of Fifth and F Streets Northwest, by Evangelist Robert L. Boothby. Mr. Boothby is speaking every night of the week except Monday and Saturday at the Bible Auditorium, and large crowds are attending these lectures.

In the meeting tomorrow night, the evangelist will show pictures on the screen, and will tell how the church began to celebrate Easter and the Christmas season, and why we associate eggs and rabbits with the resurrection of Christ, and why Santa Claus is connected with the birth of Christ. A large crowd heard the first in this series last Saturday night, and a capacity audience is expected for the second part.

Special music will be presented by a ladies' chorus, and the large choir will be directed by Leslie Mansell. The program begins at 7:30 p. m.

Marangella to Speak

Philip A. Marangella, Federal auditor, poet, lecturer and Baha'i teacher, will speak tomorrow at 8:15 p. m. in the Baha'i Hall, 1308 I Street Northwest, on "The Challenge of the New Age."

"O DEUS, EGO AMO TE"
— ST. FRANCIS XAVIER —

My God, I love Thee—not because
I hope for heaven thereby;
Nor yet because who love Thee not
Must burn eternally.

Even so I love Thee, and will love
And in Thy praise will sing;
Solely because Thou art my God
And my eternal King

Little Stories of GREAT HYMNS

This hymn, expressing the purest Christian sentiment, was written by the celebrated Jesuit missionary, "Apostle of the Andes" who, with Ignatius Loyola gave himself with a martyr's devotion to the service of propagating the Faith. The translation is by Rev. Edward Caswall, a priest of the Church of Rome.

Dr. Reissig Speaks Twice Tomorrow

"What I Want Most" will be the subject of the sermon to be brought by Dr. Frederick E. Reissig at 9 and 11 a. m. tomorrow at Mount Vernon Place Methodist Church. Dr. Reissig, executive secretary of the Washington Federation of Churches, recently came from a successful pastorate at Emanuel Lutheran Church in Rochester, N. Y. Dr. John W. Rustin, minister of the church, will be preaching at the chapel services of the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis in the morning hour. He will return to the city for the evening service at 8 o'clock and will preach on the subject, "I Sat Where They Sat." At the evening hour a special feature of the service will be the Candlelight Hymn sing. Slides will be shown with the words for congregational singing.

"Anchored By the Grace of God," with words and music by R. Deane Shure, will be sung for the first time tomorrow morning by the choir of the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis. This anthem was written on the story of the Battle of the Solomons as suggested to Shure by Chaplain Will N. Thomas of the Naval Academy, and it is very fitting that the premier should be given there.

Dean Shure is minister of music at Mount Vernon Church.

Dr. Henry to End Series Tomorrow

Dr. Robert T. Henry, Methodist missionary who was in the siege of Hongkong, will wind up his current local lecture series with three talks tomorrow.

They will be at Petworth Methodist Church, Grant Circle and New Hampshire Avenue Northwest, 11 a. m.; Foundry Methodist Young People, Sixteenth and P Streets Northwest, 7 p. m., and Brookland Methodist Church, Fourteenth and Lawrence Streets Northeast, 8 p. m.

Suburban Steeple

Youngsters of the junior and young people' classes of Dunn Loring (Va.) Methodist Sunday School now hold classes in a building converted from a chicken coop, and they are mighty proud of the renovation job they engineered on it.

BUCKELEW

Under the leadership of W. G. Buckelew, Sunday school superintendent, the young people have helped get rugs for the floors, two stoves and other equipment, while some older members painted the exterior.

According to the Rev. Harry Balthis, present pastor, the project was really started by his predecessor, the Rev. P. C. Helmintoller, who felt that something had to be done to relieve the overcrowded conditions of the Sunday school.

So Mr. Helmintoller got permission from the owner of a vacant property next door to use the empty chicken coop, and the congregation went to work, putting it in presentable shape. It has a capacity of 40 scholars. Mrs. W. E. Hudgins teaches the junior class, and F. R. Worley, the young people's class.

The congregation of Rockville (Md.) Baptist Church will burn its mortgage tomorrow at 8 p. m., when the speaker will be Dr. J. T. Watts of Baltimore, Md., State secretary of the Maryland Baptist work. The Rev. H. O. Cooper is pastor.

A roll of honor will be dedicated tomorrow at 11 a. m. at Rockville Christian Church, honoring its men in the services. Lieut. Col. Walter B. Zimmerman of the Army Chief of Chaplains' Office, will speak.

Names on the roll follow:

Guy A. Carter, John Carter, William T. Gates, John Lembach, William T. Nicholson, Norman H. Smith, William M. Veazy, jr., and G. Alfred Wilson.

'Bible Quiz Kids,' Radio Feature

Marking the second anniversary of the Bible Quiz, and broadcast No. 104, the program tonight at 9 o'clock over Station WWDC will feature the "Bible Quiz Kids," a group of six youngsters between the ages of 10 and 14, representing as many churches in the Washington area.

Participating in tonight's broadcast will be Marylin Piepgrass of Open Door Church, Billy Showalter of Christian Missionary Alliance, Nancy Williams of Metropolitan Methodist Church, and Janet Worth of Fourth Presbyterian Church, all of Washington, and Esther Richardson of Richardson Memorial Church, Colmar Manor, and Donald Savage of First Baptist Church, Mount Rainier.

Evangelist Dale Crowley will be master of ceremonies.

Calvary Group Meets Tuesday

The Fourth Quarterly Conference of Calvary Methodist Church will meet Tuesday at 8 p. m. at the church with Dr. John R. Edwards, District superintendent, presiding.

The Woman's Society of Christian Service will meet on Friday at 11 a. m. with a business session. Mrs. Adna Wright Leonard, wife of Bishop Leonard, will lead the devotions and special music will be provided by Mrs. Louise Bazemore and Mrs. Savona Griest. Mrs. Edgar W. Beckett will give a review of the book, "The Foundation."

Rev. Peyton Williams To Speak at Ascension

The Rev. Peyton R. Williams, rector of Christ Church, Georgetown, will be the special preacher at the third of the series of Sunday evening Lenten services tomorrow at 8 p. m. at the Ascension Episcopal Church, Twelfth and Massachusetts Avenue Northwest. Philip Simonds, tenor soloist of Washington Cathedral, will be guest soloist.

Other services will be 8 a. m., Holy Communion; 11 a. m., morning prayer and sermon by Canon Wolven. The Church School meets at 9:30, and the Young People's Fellowship at 7 p. m.

"Home Away From Home" is the order on Friday evening in the fellowship room, 1215 Massachusetts Avenue, a social evening for warworkers and servicemen.

Waugh to Continue 90th Anniversary Fete

The congregation of the Waugh Methodist Church, Third and A Streets Northeast, will continue its ninetieth anniversary celebration tomorrow. The Rev. William M. Hoffman, former pastor at Waugh and now at Baldwin Memorial Methodist Church, Millersville, Md., will preach at 11 a. m.

"Sunday School Adult Night" at 8 p. m. will be part of the observance. The sermon will be given by Dr. Aden P. Williams, superintendent of the Alexandria District of the Virginia Conference.

Church of Two Worlds

"Life Is a School with Many Gardens" will be the subject of the Rev. H. Gordon Burroughs, minister of the Church of Two Worlds, tomorrow evening at the Hotel Continental. At the midweek meeting on Wednesday evening there will be a lecture by the minister, followed by a message service.

The Gallup Poll

Public Opinion Sounded on Rep. Clare Luce; Women More Favorable to Her Than Men

By George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., March 26.—Probably no other woman, except Mrs. Roosevelt, is so much a topic of discussion today in political, cocktail, and sewing circles as Clare Boothe Luce, Republican Congresswoman from Connecticut.

As in the case of Mrs. Roosevelt, people are either for or "agin" Mrs. Luce. There are few who take a middle ground. From coast to coast she is as enthusiastically applauded as she is vehemently criticized. In every State of the Union the field reporters who gather the views of all classes of people for Institue polls were instructed, this last week, to ask these questions:

Have you heard or read about Mrs. Luce?

Can you tell me what her job is now?

What is your opinion of her?

The results of the first two questions are merely a matter of statistics.

Half of all persons interviewed throughout the Nation said they had heard about or read about Mrs. Luce, and eight out of every ten of those who knew about Mrs. Luce correctly identified her as a member of Congress. That leaves 50%, or half, of the people who have never heard about her.

But this figure needs to be contrasted with the number of people who know the name of their own Congressman from their own District. The typical Congressman is known by only 49 per cent of the people in his own particular District, which indicates that Claire Boothe Luce, in the course of a very few months, is as well known throughout the country as is the typical Congressman in his own District.

When the figures are analyzed they reveal that Mrs. Luce is better known among women than men, better known among the upper and middle income groups than among the lower income groups, and better known among Republicans than Democrats.

Women have a more favorable opinion of Mrs. Luce than do men. In fact, a slightly higher proportion of men express an unfavorable opinion than express a favorable opinion. The reverse is true of women. Women have these complimentary things to say about her: "She is smart and well-informed. . . . I am all for her. . . . She is extremely clever. . . . Up and coming. . . She's young and accomplishes what she sets out to do. . . . She's smart and probably sincere. . . . I envy her."

Against this type of comment can be set some by women which are less flattering: "She's given to wise-cracking without anything behind it. . . . I wish she didn't wear a babushka. . . . She ought to be in the kitchen, where women belong. . . . A flippant and frivolous-minded person. . . . Pretty, but superficial—too ambitious. . . . She wants to be a thorn in Roosevelt's side, but hasn't succeeded."

The adverse comments of men are of a slightly different character: "She's insolent and not constructive in a time of great crisis. . . . She's an imperialist under a new name. . . . Like all women, she likes to hear herself talk. . . . She's flighty and fighty. . . . She'd be better to stick to her books."

On the other hand, many men interviewed were flattering in their remarks: "She's a very handsome woman. . . She's made of good stuff. . . . She's energetic and intelligent. . . . Knows how to talk in a graphic way. . . . She's very smart and we'll hear plenty from her. . . . A bright woman who speaks her own mind. . . . She's got more sense than the Vice President . . . She's extremely smart for such a young, good-looking woman."

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

By Drew Pearson

Roosevelt-Lewis Battle

INSIDE FACT about the coal mine dispute is that it goes much deeper than an argument over wages. It gets down to a clash between two old friends, now enemies, plus a basic struggle over whether or not we shall head into a hurricane of inflation.

The two personalities, John L. Lewis and Franklin D. Roosevelt, have been working up to this battle for a long time. Once they were the closest of political allies. Lewis contributed $250,000 in one lump to Roosevelt's election campaign, put up a lot of other dough whenever needed.

John L. also was consulted on all sorts of things. He had the run of the White House, could telephone the President direct, threw his weight behind most of the New Deal program.

Gradually they drew apart. This was partly because both are strong-willed gentlemen, did not agree on everything, didn't want to yield to the other. Partly it was because the President quit calling Lewis in for consultation. Actually he had gone along with Lewis in his organization of "Little Steel," in his captive coal mine strike, had created the National Labor Relations Board, through the greatest labor reforms in 150 years of American history. However, John L. is not an easy man to satisfy.

Lewis' Last Battle

PARTLY also they drifted apart over the war. Lewis, a natural isolationist, believed that Roosevelt wanted war. This brought the final break, when John L. bolted to Willkie.

That breach—never healed—helps make the coal mine dispute difficult. John L. is determined to win the battle not merely for the sake of his miners, but because it is a showdown with his old friend, now enemy, the President of the United States. His personal prestige is at stake. If he loses, it will be his last battle. For his miners, who did not follow him to Willkie, who have resented Lewis's organization of dairy farmers, chemical workers, etc., are getting restless.

Actually the miners' wage dispute taken alone, should not be so difficult. Probably they are entitled to some increase. Unquestionably living costs have shot up in their areas. Unquestionably men are deserting the mines for higher paying war industries.

On the other hand, the miners automatically got their weekly wages upped by $13.50 a week for skilled bituminous miners when the mines went from a 35- to a 42-hour week. This gave them time and a half for the extra seven hours.

One solution of the current controversy would be to put the mines on a 48-hour week, which may be necessary anyway because of the shortage of mine labor. This would give skilled miners another $13.50 a week, would mean $27 a week more income in the last two years.

However, none of these compromises would satisfy John L. Lewis. Friends say he demands a straight-out victory.

Inflation Waterspout

SUCH A VICTORY will be resisted to the bitter end by the President for several reasons. Chief reason is that if Lewis gets an outright 2-a-day wage increase or anything approaching it, a long list of unions which have been denied increases and swallowed their medicine will immediately come clamoring back. The aircraft workers who were rebuffed recently by the War Labor Board probably would strike, if Lewis now squeezes $2 out of the WLB and they still failed to get their increase.

Even more vehement would be the farmers. Most of them hate John L. Lewis. The President knows this. He also knows that he never could hold down farmers' price demands if Lewis wins his battle. That, of course, opens up the whole waterspout of inflation. And that is why the grim battle between those two one-time friends actually is almost as important as the current battle for Tunisia.

Mrs. Miniver and Tobruk

SENATORS GEORGE of Georgia and McFarland of Arizona, together with Jesse Jones, paid tribute to Hollywood's contribution to the luncheon in a Senate private dining room the other day.

At the luncheon Mayer disclosed an interesting bit of history which occurred when Churchill was visiting at the White House last year, during the fall of Tobruk. The Prime Minister was bitterly shocked over this defeat and the President was worried over the effect on the American public. He feared it might give the impression that England was not fighting to the last ditch.

It happened that Churchill had seen a preview at the White House of the smash picture, "Mrs. Miniver," showing the struggle and sacrifice of the British people. The President was so impressed with it that he had OWI's Elmer Davis phone Mayer and ask that "Mrs. Miniver" be released throughout the country at once, well in advance of its scheduled release date.

Mayer was glad to do so, though at a loss of about $5,000,000 to his company.

Capital Chaff

Latest way of saving shoe leather was demonstrated in the cocktail lounge when a young man kicked off his shoes and escorted his partner to the dance floor in stocking feet. Headwaiter Teddy Estelmann stopped the orchestra, said, "Please, sir, go back and put on your shoes." The young man obliged but not until after he had scored his point—that shoes will last longer if you don't wear them . . . Senator Jim Mead, who was awfully anxious for newspaper publicity when running for Governor of New York, now sneaks down back elevators with his hat pulled down, to avoid newsmen . . . British Oversea Airways Corporation is now operating four planes a week across Africa, using the bases built by Pan American Airways under the United States Government subsidy. The British are worried lest we keep these air bases and monopolize African air transport after the war . . . Tennis-playing Henry Wallace will need a strong heart as he flies into La Paz, Bolivia, altitude 12,000 feet. The planes operate at 21,000 feet over this section of the Andes . . . Congressman George J. Bates of Massachusetts is trying to persuade the OPA to modify shoe rationing in the interest of Haverill manufacturers. They specialize in low-priced shoes for women, but under rationing women are buying for durability, and the manufacturers of low-priced shoes are being forced out of business.

Passion In Blinkers

The House is presumably discussing a bill introduced by the Ways and Means Committee providing for imposition of a 20 per cent withholding tax on wages and salaries and allowing certain discounts for advance tax payments on 1943 incomes. Actually the battle on the House floor is being waged over the Ruml pay-as-you-go plan. Chairman Doughton devoted a good part of his time on Thursday to an impassioned denunciation of proposals to "skip" or "forgive" a year's taxes and to denials that the committee bill would require payment of two years taxes in one year. Of course, no careful commentator has ever asserted that the Ways and Means Committee proposal contemplated compulsory doubling up of tax payments. But, as Mr. Doughton was compelled to admit, the bill does require payment of two years' taxes in one year to put the taxpayer on a current basis. Moreover, critics were quick to point out that the individuals who might be able to take advantage of the discounts offered for advance payment of income taxes would probably be the wealthier taxpayers.

The longer this controversy is prolonged, the more evident it becomes that further talking is useless. On one side are ranged those who, like Chairman Doughton, regard taxes levied on last year's incomes as a sacred debt owing by the taxpayer. To "skip" a year, according to his reasoning, is to commit an immoral act, though the only possible way to skip a year is to give the tax collector a year's vacation. The Ruml tax plan, he asserts, is to "sound tax policy what infidelity is to true Bible religion," a simile which would make the angels weep. A man who sincerely feels that way about the Ruml plan is impervious to arguments based on common sense and expediency. His thoughts are concentrated on the long-range possible losses of revenue to the Government and the incidental windfalls to individuals resulting from shifting the tax base.

On the other side are ranged those who concede that some windfalls would result from the Ruml plan—that some injustices would follow. However, the Carlson plan, which is based on the Ruml proposal, affords protection against tax remissions that would enrich persons with large incomes or those in receipt of greatly increased war profits. Advocates of this proposal point out, too, that the shift to a current basis would increase rather than diminish Government revenue, since canceled liabilities would be more than offset by bringing forward by a year payments on 1943 incomes.

"In fact," Representative Knutson said, in course of the debate, "the Treasury stands to gain three billion dollars by the adoption of the Carlson bill, since the 1943 income-tax assessment is estimated at 13 billion dollars as against only 10 billion dollars for the 1942 assessment." Mr. Doughton had previously asserted that "forgiveness of 1942 tax liabilities will result in a loss to the Government of almost 10 billion dollars." Fortunately Mr. Doughton vouchsafed an explanation of his statement that helps to clear up the confusion caused by such divergent estimates. He concedes that this 10 billion loss "may not be felt in 1943." "In fact," he says, "it probably would not be reflected to any great extent in our tax collection so long as the income for each succeeding year exceeds or equals that for the previous year. But the loss is there all the same, and its impact is only delayed or postponed until the year of declining incomes, when it will strike with full force against our revenues and against a different set of taxpayers."

Evidently Mr. Doughton is thinking in terms of postwar conditions, and the effect that shifting the tax base now may have in the dim and uncertain future. In ordinary times this long-range viewpoint would have much to commend it. But the country happens to be faced by an emergency that calls for reform of our methods of tax assessments to assure prompt and up-to-date collection of taxes from persons with highly inflated incomes. The incidental injustices resulting from putting tax payments on a current basis would be much more than offset by the immediate and future advantages of a reform in methods of assessment and collection that would help to combat our creeping inflation.

For the great mass of taxpayers, the shift to a current basis would be chiefly a matter of convenience. Some would gain a little, others would lose a little by having to relate this year's tax payments to this year's income. But for the great majority, it would mean paying much as usual so long as they were in receipt of steady incomes. Only when their incomes ceased or they died would they or their heirs benefit by a change to a pay-as-you-go basis. For in that case, there would be no tax liabilities carried over from the preceding year. Meantime, they would be relieved of the necessity of saving one year to meet taxes due the next year. And they would also be protected from the danger of involuntary tax defaults should they fail to save and unexpectedly suffer a sharp reduction in income.

Hiring And Firing

The power to hire is the power to fire, but the President persistently shrinks from applying logic to his appointive function. A prime example is the appointment of Mr. Chester C. Davis as Administrator of Food Production and Distribution, vice Secretary Wickard. Mr. Davis is thus put side by side with the former food czar instead of supplanting him. Even as Secretary of Agriculture, as Mr. Arthur Krock points out, Mr. Davis would not be given a status befitting his crucial function in this period of total war. What the country needs is what it got in the last war, namely, a food administrator with a seat in a war cabinet. What it has got is a kind of subadministrator whose appointment will doubtless create its own brood of jurisdictional disputes.

Thus, instead of bringing order out of chaos, Mr. Roosevelt is merely piling chaos on chaos. This comes from his chronic unwillingness to fire administrators who have proved unequal to their war jobs. That unwillingness is a congenital weakness, and the Nation might be happy to indulge it but for the fact that nowadays it is the greatest menace to an early victory. Periodically from the start of the war we have pleaded for a house cleaning as well as a reorganization of the Government in the light of total war needs. Within a month of Pearl Harbor we said that the President had a moral contract with the people to make his war administration representative of the brains of the Nation. He has not done so. There has never been the overhaul in the top places of Government which conversion to war demanded. The result has been cumulatively unfortunate. The spectable of ineptitude at the high level has had the dual result of retarding administration and disturbing the American people. Another result is that good men who should be at work in Washington will not accept jobs under administrators who have proved to be unfitted for their great responsibilities.

The situation might have been taken in hand and rectified after the last election. If there was one clear mandate from the people, it was to clean house in Washington. Feeling that the President's congenital unwillingness to fire the unsuited would bar a reshuffle, we suggested that as a patriotic duty the Cabinet and the administrators should free the President's hands by offering their resignations. But there has not been the slightest change except such as to make confusion more confounded, as the Davis appointment does. Thus our democracy—which, according to Bernard Shaw, is a system whereby the people put the pressure on their government—has been thwarted.

No doubt the Byrnes report on manpower administration submitted by the President's intimate advisers makes clear our shortcomings in administration. It is our guess, indeed, that the Davis appointment stems from an effort by the President haltingly to meet a suggestion by this committee. But the way the President has chosen to meet it is the kind of remedy that makes one despair of a proper cure. Perhaps Secretary Wickard will eventually go, but we recall Secretary Swanson, who was allowed to hang on to his Secretaryship while he lay for months on his deathbed. Let Mr. Roosevelt release the Byrnes report and carry out the thoroughgoing reshuffle which it doubtless calls for. The Capital has become cluttered with second-rate men holding down first-rate jobs. Political courage by the President in fitting men to the job would win rich dividends in popular confidence and progress in winning the war.

'Plague Spots'

That the "plague spots" pointed out by The Post in its expose of insanitary conditions in and near Washington were not isolated cases has been substantiated by citizens calling attention to situations in virtually every section of the city and its suburbs. Charges of negligence have been made against officials. But the problem will not be solved by indignation alone. We have pointed out the economic advantage of a single metropolitan area sanitary system, but it is obvious that we cannot wait for remedies coming from a change in administration. Remedial measures are needed now. Therefore it is gratifying to see that action has begun with the Police Department decision to inspect District alleys and a congressional request for a report from Engineer Commissioner Kutz. Brigadier General Kutz, incidentally, has said that The Post stories "have been 100 per cent correct."

However, in the light of the tight allowance of funds for the sanitary inspection service, all censure must not be loaded upon the back of the Health Department. Indeed, there is much to indicate that the Health Department is doing the best it can under the circumstances. Only in the 1944 budget is allowance made for a public health engineer to head the sanitary division. This allowance has been needed and requested for years by the department.

The inspection service also is understaffed, service having to be limited to the inspection of spots about which complaints are received.

Yet, in the 1943 budget, the Health Department asked funds for additional inspectors and expected to get Lanham Act funds to provide salaries for 14 more. Salaries for eight were provided in the budget and no help has materialized from Lanham funds, since the Budget Bureau ruled that monies "were not to be used to supplement activities of the District Health Department which the Public Health Service already had authority by law to supplement." Public Health Service funds, however, were already allotted before it was decided that requests for additional personnel which District authorities had thought to obtain with Lanham Act funds must be made to the USPHS. The problem of keeping the city sanitary would seem to require not only conscientious officials but also enough qualified staff members.

Wanted—250 Women

Military authorities in Washington firmly believe that at least a token bombing will be visited upon the Capital before the war is over. That being so, the word is going out to key up our defense against the sky invaders. One of our defense measures is the Antiaircraft Volunteers, a body of women who work in shifts around the clock in registering the movements of all aircraft in this vicinity. They are not spotters, but plotters, and receive all signals from the outside and reproduce the sky traffic on a huge board. The organization serves as a sort of clearing house of what is going on above the metropolitan area. More volunteers are now required, 250 more. It is fascinating, and may be exciting, work that the recruits would be called upon to do, but easy enough to learn for any high school graduate. That it is likewise important goes without saying. Already the women have relieved soldiers in the antiaircraft units for other duties.

The suggestion is made that the period of duty would appeal particularly to housewives anxious to serve their country directly. For the shifts run only four hours every third day, and the shifts particularly in need of assistance are those from 7 to 11 in the morning and from 3 to 7 in the afternoon. It is seldom that such an opportunity presents itself to serve one's country in a quasi-military capacity so conveniently as to the period of duty. Yes, it is real service. Volunteers must take an oath, wear a slack and shirt uniform and distinguishing badge, and are transported to and from the undesignated, pleasant working rooms by Army bus. There is a three-day training period, after passing the test. Then the volunteers are enrolled in the local unit the members of which have already become so proficient that theirs is called the "show" board of the Nation. Any woman between the ages of 18 and 45 with a high school education who is alert should be able easily to qualify and may apply by contacting the Civilian Defense Volunteer Office at 2324 F Street Northwest, REpublic 5105.

Salute To Greece

With Greece under the Nazi yoke, there was no public celebration in that country this week of the 122d anniversary of its independence. But while the conquerors could prevent the Greek people from publicly commemorating that occasion, they could not prevent them from thinking about it and deriving hope and courage from the thought. The Greeks know from their own magnificent history that tyrants are transitory, that only freedom and the spirit of man are eternal. They know that some day liberation from the Herrenvolk will come as liberation from foreign rule came a century and two decades ago. They have the satisfaction, too, of knowing that to keep Greece free the Greeks of the present generation fought with a gallantry and courage worthy of their forebears, though they fought against overwhelming odds.

The Greeks still fight on—in the mountain passes of their native land, in the hills of Crete, in the desert wastes of southern Tunisia, where they form part of the great British Eighth Army, in the waters of the seven seas. To the Greeks living under the Nazi yoke and to those who escaped to freedom, this week is a week of rededication and renewed hope. And everywhere this week, free men will salute their ally, Hellas, a bright star in the constellation of free nations.

BALLAD

He came from out the sunset,
He rode straight to the moon,
And on the way he passed me—
I reeled—I thought to swoon.
For when he reached my doorway,
His white steed prancing high,
He paused—but for a moment—
A smile was in his eye.
He leaned down from the saddle
And I drew back in shame—
Then was it some false zephyr
Or whispered he my name?
Then whinnied thrice the stallion—
Three times the rider spurred—
Each time he circled back again
Each time my name I heard.
And who he was I know not,
And who, I do not care—
But if the moon's his dwelling,
My heart abideth there.

Mexican Economy

By Virginia Prevett

Rapid Expansion

AS THE first quarter of 1943 ends, reports on all phases of activity in Mexico leave little doubt that an economic expansion of something near boom proportions is under way there. From the record of 1917-18, it was known that United States demands for raw materials would inevitably speed up Mexican production when this country went into the Second World War. Three factors, however, are pushing the present speed-up beyond all expectations.

In the first place, ship shortage has caused this country to draw far more heavily than was foreseen on Mexico's mineral and even agricultural products, which can come to us overland. Second, this war has cut Mexico off from imports to a degree that nobody foresaw. This is forcing the expansion of manufacturing for home markets to the limit of possibilities. The third factor is that for two years now money has been streaming into Mexico from abroad.

Money Floods In

Some of this is Mexican money, returning since the Avila Camacho administration has established peace between capital and labor. A great deal of it is refugee European funds. A great deal is American capital returning to the scene since the American and Mexican governments have settled the difficulties that grew acute in the late 1930's and have embarked on a program of close and friendly cooperation.

As a result, Mexican mining, agriculture, manufacturing, public services, ranching, lumbering, merchandising and construction are busy as never before. Nearly twice as much money is in circulation as in 1940 and banks are full.

As we in this country know from our own war expansion, this situation, at first glance, an entirely happy one, in fact, gives rise to serious problems. For several years before the war, it was the Mexican government's policy to stimulate farm prices and home manufacturing through a mild controlled inflation. War demands for goods and materials and the pressure of the increased money in circulation have during the past year threatened to take this out of hand.

The crux of the problem is of course the rise in the cost of living, which foreshadows hardship on large numbers of people whose earnings are not spiraling upward at the same rate. As compared with August, 1939, indices, Mexican food prices were up 31 points in December, 1942, clothing was up 93 points and articles of home use were up 76 points. The sharp rise started in 1941.

The Mexican government set up an official agency in May, 1941, to prevent speculation in foodstuffs and price ceilings were subsequently fixed for gasoline, rice, beans, corn, wheat and beef. Living costs have continued sharply upward, however, and the government is now organizing a board to intervene even more actively in commodity markets to stop inflationary speculation. At the same time, price ceilings will be put on all "essential articles." Severe penalties have been set for violation of the new regulations.

In announcing this new board, President Manuel Avila Camacho pointed out that the tighter control system will not be used to beat prices down, but to give the consumer a reasonable protection. He emphasized that no matter what passing inconveniences or even hardships Mexicans may have to undergo through the present period, the country as a whole stands to gain material economic progress from it.

The permanent gains that Mexico can expect out of the war period are very considerable indeed. To begin with, perhaps her greatest need, that of better communications, is being met. To get out war materials, we are overhauling her wornout railroads and cooperating in building great trunk roads. Airfields are multiplying. Port improvements are being rushed.

Mexico's rare minerals are being sought out and mined. Agriculture is being taught to produce new crops, noncompetitive tropical products for our market. Corn, rice and beans are finding new Caribbean and Central American markets. New rural roads and irrigation systems are building.

Industries Improve

But most important to Mexico is the industrial development under way. Every existing industry, her textile, paper, cement, glass, shoe, soap and canning factories, her iron foundries and machine shops, are learning to operate more efficiently under pressure of demand. New industries are numerous. Mexico is today making many chemicals, medicines and hardware supplies formerly bought from Germany. Several new electric power plants installed to increase production of strategic supplies are of prime importance to Mexico's economic future. A power shortage was a bottleneck to industrial development before the war. Very important also is the new blast furnace and rolling mill at Monclova. This plant will produce pig iron and steel plates for us during the war and will materially relieve Mexico's dependence on European imports afterward.

These developments hold future promise for this country as well as for Mexico. She has always bought by far the greater percentage of her imports from us. The record of our trade with other nations, notably Canada, shows conclusively that the volume of Mexican purchases from us will increase as she industrializes.

Air Power Factor

Decline Of The Luftwaffe

IT IS, unfortunately, still too early to write the obituary of the Luftwaffe which for three fateful years—1938 to 1941—dominated the skies over Europe and helped Hitler win his most spectacular diplomatic and military victories.

The German air arm is still a formidable instrument. But signs are multiplying that it has long since passed its zenith and is now on the downgrade.

Indeed, one war correspondent, Mr. William W. White, in a dispatch to the New York Herald Tribune from the Tunisian front suggests that "the Luftwaffe may be the first fighting force to crack." And he quotes a captured German flier as saying that "a big percentage of the Luftwaffe is demoralized."

This is almost too good to be true and the obviously wise course is to take such statements with a grain of salt. Yet something has happened to the Luftwaffe and that something spells increasingly bad news for Hitler.

AT HIS PRESS conference the other day, Secretary of War Stimson declared that our forces in Tunisia are shooting down three or four Axis planes for every one we lose.

Such a rate of attrition if long continued and on a large scale would be extremely bad from the German point of view even if the Reich's plane replacement capacity were on a par with that of the Allies. Actually Germany is steadily slipping behind in the vital production race.

American plane production today is in the vicinity of 5500 planes a month. German production, according to the best estimates, is now only around 2000 a month. And in addition to our production Hitler must also reckon with the output of Britain and Russia.

DECLINE in the production of planes is, however, only one of the handicaps from which the Luftwaffe suffers today.

In addition to quantitative, it has also to reckon with qualitative inferiority vis-a-vis Allied air power. The Lufawaffe is now beginning to suffer from that curse of obsolescence which, in turn, destroyed the primacy, first, of the French and, later, of the Italian air force. This is most clearly illustrated in what has happened to the JU-87b — the famed Stuka.

In the battle of France no weapon in Hitler's armory received more publicity than this dive-bomber. It then demonstrated a great capacity to demoralize the morale of ground troops, as well as to destroy material objectives.

Under the circumstances, it is hardly surprising that the Germans for a long time continued to put many of their production eggs in the Stuka basket and continued to employ the Stuka long after the law of diminishing returns had begun to operate against that type.

IT MUST not be assumed, of course, that the whole of the Luftwaffe is now as obsolescent as the Stuka.

New German types of planes and improvement on old types are constantly making their appearance on the various battlefields. But the process of retooling has been difficult and costly, in view of the fact that the German aircraft industry was for so long frozen as to types and in the face of the imperative need of turning out as many planes as possible to take care of the expanding fronts.

In the meantime, persistent bombing by the R. A. F. and, latterly, by the United States Eighth Air Force, has involved the destruction of German factories—aircraft and parts factories among them — increased Germany's transportation difficulties, lowered the productivity of her workers and added to her raw-material shortages.

The over-all result has been not merely a relative decline in the Luftwaffe's strength, but an absolute decline as well. The Luftwaffe is now well below its own 1940-1941 peak.

This circumstance long ago forced the German high command to resort to dangerous economies in the use of air power.

Not having enough planes to continue the large-scale bombing of Britain, provide Rommel in Egypt with air superiority, meet the mounting Allied air attacks on German and German-held cities and carry out a major offensive in the Caucasus, the high command had to establish priorities.

What it did was practically to abandon attacks on Britain, skimp on the defensive air force in western Europe, send only an indispensable minimum of air strength to Rommel and concentrate the bulk of the Luftwaffe on the Eastern Front.

THIS, roughly, was the situation last summer and fall. The arrival of British and American troops in French North Africa, plus the brilliant sweep of the British Eighth Army across Egypt and Libya, forced a still further diversion of German air strength.

At the present time, according to some estimates, well over half the Luftwaffe is now concentrated in Tunisia and Western Europe. As long as weather conditions on the Eastern Front make flying difficult this shift of the bulk of German air power to the west may not much matter. But by summer the demands on the Luftwaffe both in Russia and in the west are certain to increase considerably.

We have it on the authority of Maj. Gen. Ira C. Eaker, commander of the Eighth Air Force, that the experimental stage of daylight bombing of German cities by Flying Fortresses and Liberators is now over and both the frequency and the volume of such raids will soon increase. So will the attacks on Germany by the R. A. F.

The decline of the Luftwaffe is something to cheer about. But that decline has not yet proceeded to the point where the war can be won by air power alone, certainly by the air power we possess on the periphery of the European continent. At the same press conference where he revealed that our fliers were shooting down three or four Axis planes for every one lost on our side, Secretary Stimson also emphasized that the "grim conclusive battle must be fought on the ground." And what is true in Tunisia is also true in Europe.

Forgotten Citizens

There is urgent need of awakening Congress to the sad plight of the in-between portion of our citizens who have no organization and who appear to be unrepresented in Congress. We hear daily of the farm bloc, of the labor bloc, and of the big business bloc. The large inarticulate group of people outside or in-between the foregoing blocs, composed of people with moderate incomes, are being slowly but surely driven to desperation.

The cost of living has been soaring, as any shopper will tell you. Inflation is not around the corner. It is here!

The tremendous wages now paid to labor in war plants and elsewhere, and their ever-increasing demands for higher wages, are all reflected in living costs. For instance, give attention to just a few items:

Rib roast	55c a pound
Apples	$5.40 to $6 a bushel
Asparagus	95 cents a bunch
Potatoes	2 lbs., 21c, or $4 a bushel
Chickens	42c a pound

To put it another way, living costs have almost doubled in the past year. Families with small incomes, of which there are many, may no longer buy the foods which add pleasure to eating. That necessary function is now a chore!

Liked Our Map

Congratulations on your presentation of the "Flying Clock" on the first page of section 2 of today's Post. It certainly brings home to the average person just why we have GOT to be internationally minded hereafter in our foreign relations.

Maps of this type should be placed in every school in the Nation—and a "Flying Clock" should be made up for every city—and made available to their local schools.

Butter To Russia

The other day I noticed news accounts stating that the United States was shipping tons of butter to Russia to be used in civilian and military consumption. Another news article tells that the 1943 production of butter in the United States is peak of all time. And still another news account reports that under the new ration system Americans are to get less than a pound of butter a month!

I don't want to be put in the category of a Russian critic. Actually I take my hat off to the Soviet as being the best United Nations fighter in Europe.

But why the necessity for sending American butter to Russia? Seems to me that a Russian needs food necessities, rather than delicacies, and anyone that knows Russia knows that butter to the average Russian is a delicacy. Just a few days ago I read that the Russian soldiers indulged in a feast when given lard to spread over their bread! HARRY P. KERTH.

Soldier Sightseeing

Thousands of servicemen visiting Washington for the first time wander aimlessly around the vicinity of Union Station wondering where beautiful Washington is hidden. Now that warm weather is almost here, the indoor activities for the servicemen will be less attractive, and the Stage Door Canteen will lose some of its popularity.

Why not a bus line for soldiers and sailors that would carry the boys (and girls too) past all the principal points of interest.

The least we can do for these traveling herces is to give them a brief glimpse of our wonderful city.

A well informed guide should accompany each bus. D. L.

Movies And Food

Several picture companies announce they will ban or greatly tone down scenes of feasts, banquets or elaborate dinners for the duration. The idea is that they are resented by the public in times like these.

"Nonsense!" exclaimed Elmer Twitchell today. "For the past year I have lived largely on cinema meals. Hungry and weak, I have gone to a movie and found my appetite appeased in no time.

"There was one spell when I had lost 10 pounds. I went to a Cecille DeMille picture and put on 15 in the first reel!

"With new ration rules coming every day and with the people having troubles galore getting food, the one source of relief has been those Hollywood feasts. Even a breakfast as shown by most directors was enough to make you unbutton your vest.

"Last week I went to my butcher to beg for a small chuck steak. I couldn't get it. Well, I went over to the nearest movie theater and ran right into 'Philadelphia Story'—a return engagement, of course—and enjoyed two of the finest meals I ever had, one indoors and one outdoors, with whole sides of beef in them. They showed close-ups of the gravies—yum, yum! And there were flashes of the thick soups from 11 angles!

"The wife came home exhausted the other day from a losing fight for a few cans of food. She was terribly depressed. I took her to a picture palace and it had a breakfast that would have done anybody else for a six-course dinner.

"Such grapefruit—big as watermelons! Such sausages! They showed them sizzling in the frying pan! Such wheat cakes! I think four authors, three directors, two producers, four composers and six artists got credit lines for 'em!

"Then they served ham and eggs, too. They showed these eggs—sunny side up—photographed from above, below and from east and west.

"Mrs. Twitchell was a new woman at once. And I never saw her so happy as when they poured the coffee. The pot was as big as a stove and everybody had two or three cups.

"Then came the finest hot rolls the movie world has ever produced. I undestand it took 24 weeks, 182 people and 100 million dollars to get just the right touch to 'em. And that 100 million dollars didn't include the butter!"

Elmer was licking his lips. "I can't believe Hollywood is serious about abolishing these things," he added. "Lower morale, my eye! They raise morale. Picture fans of America arise! We must not stand meekly by and see the movies as short of food as our own homes are. On with the baronial manor feasts! We want more groaning boards. Where else will we get butter?"

Fair Practice

On June 25, 1941, President Roosevelt issued Executive Order No. 8802. The order reiterated basic rights of minority groups in our country, and provided for the elimination, in war industries, of employment practices discriminatory to persons because of their race, color, creed, or place of national origin. The President's Fair Employment Practice Committee (FEPC) was set up to administer the order, and it has done an excellent job under the most trying of circumstances.

In January of this year, War Manpower Chairman McNutt, into whose agency FEPC had been transferred on July 30, 1942, ordered certain railroad hearings, currently scheduled by FEPC, indefinitely postponed. Discriminatory practices on 25 Southern railroads were under investigation, and the "cancellation" of the hearings resulted in completely stultifying FEPC. The President put the whole question of FEPC's future on the doorsteps of Mr. McNutt and Attorney General Biddle before he went to Casablanca, and it has been on the laps of these gentlemen since then.

This is no place to discuss the basic issues involved in what every thoughtful person recognizes as a critical situation. Sufficient to say that the problem of enforcing Executive Order No. 8802 goes to the heart of the present world conflict, and that the refusal of the generations before us and ourselves to understand and rationally deal with the underlying issues of racial and religious prejudice is a primary cause of World War II. It is easy enough to say "we must win the war first," but is there not an internal war going on too? If we do not face that internal struggle, our ultimate victory over Hitler and Hirohito will be a hollow one indeed.

There has been enough of delay and fumbling with regard to the clarification of executive policy as to the FEPC. The President made a step in the right direction on June 25, 1941. A dangerous cancer existed and still exists in our body politic. The world has been compelled to resort to surgery in international affairs. The surgeon's knife, force, is never a good answer to anything. It is an admission of failure. I sincerely hope that we do not fail domestically, and that an inevitable explosion will be avoided by a wise disposition of the FEPC problem—NOW. DEMOPUBLICAN.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

Mr. Churchill On China And Europe

THE POINT in Mr. Churchill's broadcast which has caused the chief misunderstanding was his saying he hoped that "the United Nations, headed by the three great victorious powers," Britain, the United States and Russia, would "immediately begin to confer upon the future world organization." The question is whether he should have said "the United Nations, headed by the four great victorious powers," which would have included China.

LIPPMANN

The answer to that question depends upon whether or not we are discussing the problem of world peace realistically, candidly, and in earnest. It is plain that Mr. Churchill was. Yet in view of the fact that Chinese-British relations have not been altogether happy, it is easy to see why Mr. Churchill left the Chinese feeling unhappy. It may be, then, that Americans have something to contribute which may clarify the mater.

THE REASON for inviting the three, rather than the four, great powers to head the arrangements for world peace is that they alone have vital interests both in the Pacific and in the Atlantic, both in the East and in the West. They are in fact the three world powers because in any major disturbance of the peace anywhere they are all three involved directly. This is not true of China, and it is no slight to the dignity of China to recognize in the practical work which lies ahead that she has no direct interest and no direct responsibility in the policing of Europe, Africa, and the Atlantic Ocean. The other American republics do not feel that they are slighted because they are not members of the Pacific Council.

Now if we are serious about organizing world peace, then we must not boggle at the idea that the fundamental responsibility for it must rest primarily not upon honorary titles, abstractions, or political compliments but upon the nations which have vital interest backed by adequate power. The peoples of the world who want their world organized for peace will not be disgruntled, in fact they will be deeply reassured, if they see that at long last we are proceeding with cold, realistic, and precise objectivity rather than with the sentimental generalities which have hitherto promised so much and produced so little.

IT MUST be admitted that Mr. Churchill's proposal would have been less open to misunderstanding if the relations between London and Chungking were better. Americans are perhaps in a position to say without its being resented that both our allies are at fault in that they have allowed their high, common and permanent interests to be obscured by resentments over relatively smaller matters.

British official opinion about China, it must I think be said, has been too greatly influenced by the least attractive side of that older British imperialism which is dead or dying in the United Kingdom and in the great dominions. The Chinese resent it. On the other hand Chinese resentment has often been carried to a point, for example in India and for example in conversation with Americans, where it agitates against the harmony of the United Nations.

AS THE FRIENDS of both powers we can understand how both feel. But we have a right to ask them to submerge their feelings in a larger view. We have a right to ask British officialdom to realize that we regard China as our indispensable ally not only because of her armies and her strategic position near to Japan, and not only because of her great and ancient culture, and not only because we like the Chinese immensely as human beings, but for another and still deeper reason.

We look upon the friendship of China as the only possible guaranty that the Asiatic war will not degenerate now, or explode later, into an endless conflict between the Western and the Eastern peoples. That is why we wish the British and the Russians to walk with us hand in hand with the Chinese.

BELIEVING this, we have a right to say to the Chinese that the liberation of Chinese soil depends in a decisive measure upon the force which Great Britain can assemble in India. Therefore, it is not in China's interest that the Generalissimo or that Mme. Chiang Kai-shek should intervene in India as the partisans of those Hindu leaders, who, like Gandhi, are avowedly opposed to waging war against Japan.

Nor is it in China's interest, while making representations for greater immediate assistance, even to seem to be opposed to the settled war strategy of the United Nations. While undoubtedly more can and should be done by making greater exertions, there is no use denying that for really substantial action in the East, the Mediterranean must first be opened. For it is only by opening the Mediterranean that the naval forces and the shipping can be found which are needed to open the Burma Road.

AMERICANS may have a small bone of their own to pick with Mr. Churchill's speech. It has to do with his use of the name "Council of Europe." It would be much better if he called it something else, perhaps the Council of the West. For just what is "Europe"? Are Britain and Russia in "Europpe"? Are we in "Europe"? Is Africa in "Europe"? The words Council of Europe will suggest to many the very idea which we ought to wish to avoid—namely that the Continent of Europe from Spain and the English Channel to the Russian frontier is a distinct and separate thing. If it is, it will be a German Europe and indeed a pan-German Europe, for Europe in this sense would inevitably be dominated by Germany.

But in fact peace in the western world depends upon three non-European powers—Britain, Russia and America. And it depends not only upon the condition of the continent but upon the condition of Africa as well. And Africa which is inseparable from the European continent is also inseparale, we now know, from the Americas. Not only the United States but Brazil and all the South American republics are as vitally concerned as France or Britain or Spain or Portugal in the peace and order of North and West Africa.

WE ALL know, of course, that there are continental European affairs that do not concern us immediately, as there are inter-American affairs that do not concern the transatlantic states immediately. Nevertheless, the larger issues of peace and war are not "European" but Western, and since things often tend to become what they are called, we must not by inadvertence get off to a false start.

Food Plans Criticized

Agencies Assailed

Chicago, March 26 (AP).—Wheeler McMillen, editor of the Farm Journal and agricultural authority called on the Administration today to take immediate steps to end what he termed unnecessarily severe food rationing scheduled to become effective Monday.

There is no need for any city family to go hungry this year or next, McMillen said in a statement, which asserted that farmers, "if not prevented by the bureaucrats, can and will produce enough food."

"Both production and distribution are now being interfered with," the statement said, "until the city breadwinner promises to be 1943's forgotten man. He can earn money and count rationing coupons and still not eat three healthy meals a day.

"Over him and his family dangle penalties for the years of crop restrictions. Edicts, decrees, production penalties and regimenters became more abundant than crops. We had the ever-normal granary. Now we have the ration line. Rationing is accepted as a wartime necessity, but it doesn't have to be managed by ill trained incompetents skilled only in making more numerous and more irritating mistakes.

"If the job of getting food to the people were left to the farmers and to businessmen with whatever minimum of regulation war requires, every ration coupon might be worth more next winter.

"Even though the food supply cannot be quite as usual in wartimes, it won't be the fault of the farmers if there is an unnecessary shortage in the city markets. It will be the fault of the triple A, of the War Manpower Commission, of the OPA, of the Office of Civilian Supply, the Department of Agriculture and of the White House. It will be because Washington planned it wrong.

"The White House should plow under the little bureaus and slaughter the red tape. The cure for the shortage is not more regulations, but to let the farmers grow more food. It is better to produce an abundance than to ration a scarcity.

"No war was ever won on an empty stomach."

Views With Alarm

Philadelphia, March 26 (AP).—Dr. E. L. Nixon, former president of the Pennsylvania Food and Potato Growers Association, says "I can see people starving in America before the year is out."

Nixon, now an adviser to a chain store council, made the statement to a Chamber of Commerce food committee during a discussion of the farm labor shortage and what he called "the Government's failure" to adopt an effective food program last summer.

R.A.F. Reported Raiding Ruhr

London (Saturday), March 27 (AP). British bombers were over the industrial Ruhr section of Germany during the night, it was learned authoritatively tonight.

There were indications that the R. A. F. was out in force.

One of the biggest raids of the year was delivered in the same area when Essen was blasted March 12.

Text of Eden's Address to Maryland Legislature

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Md., March 26.—Following is the prepared text of a speech by Anthony Eden, British Foreign Secretary, before the General Assembly of Maryland:

First let me say that I feel at home here. From my earliest years I have been steeped in the atmosphere of Maryland. It is a keen personal pleasure to stand in Annapolis, on the spot where Robert Eden once stood.

A few miles away, in the city hall at Baltimore, now hang the pictures of the Calvert family from whom I am proud to be descended. They are friendly faces, which I recognize from my childhood days, when they looked down on me from the walls of my father's house. I am even prouder of the fact that one of the Calverts, the third Lord Baltimore, was the prime mover in the Great Act of 1649, by which the early settlers were assured of full freedom to worship God according to their conscience. That was nearly 300 years ago, but our times have given new significance to that event.

Four and a half years have passed since I last stood on American soil. They are years that have changed the face of the world, and brought much suffering to the human race. Some of us in Europe thought we saw the catastrophe approaching, and felt the chill of the coming storm, while many, both of my countrymen and yours, were still clinging to the precarious hope of peace. This was, no doubt, excusable enough. There is always a strong temptation for countries to try to preserve their own peace of mind by turning a deaf ear to the first warnings of danger from abroad.

End of Vain Hopes

We know now how vain were these hopes and efforts. So far as we were concerned, Hitler finally destroyed any possibility of illusion by his repeated violation of treaties, by his open repudiation of any rule but that of force. It was plain beyond argument that not Poland, not Europe itself, would satisfy his mad ambitions. His purpose was the conquest and domination of the world.

Thus, for the second time within a generation, we are at war to redeem our pledged word.

The decision to take up the challenge was a decision of a united people at home. It was indorsed at once by the Parliaments and peoples of the great overseas dominions — Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa, and by all parts of the British Empire. From that day in early September, 1939, there has been no turning back, there will be no turning back until victory is won.

We are not yet at the climax of the struggle. And I must repeat the warning I uttered when I first arrived here a fortnight ago. We have yet far to travel before the final triumph over our enemies in the West and in the East. In the interval there will be strains and stresses, setbacks and disappointments.

But if we nerve ourselves to meet these; if we work to the utmost of our strength, the result is not in doubt. In a struggle of this nature, it is clearly desirable that those upon whom the responsibility lies in each of the Allied belligerent states should meet in personal conference as often as they can. There is in truth no substitute for such meetings. Men who do not know each other well cannot exchange views by dispatch or cable to best advantage.

I was therefore happy to accept the invitation of your Government to pay this visit to the United States. Nothing could have exceeded the kindness and hospitality that has been shown to me by everyone, by the President, by Mr. Hull, by the members of Congress and by all with whom I have been privileged to work. We have done much together, and we are both well pleased at the result. For myself, I can only say this. In my life it has fallen to my lot on many occasions to visit foreign capitals, and I am sure that never in my experience has a journey been more worth while. You will not expect, I trust, sudden and sensational developments. For there will be none. But there has been a meeting of minds between us about the present and the future that will, we are sure, bear fruit.

During my brief visit it has been my good fortune to spend some days in visits to your Army and Navy. I can assure you in all sincerity that I have never known a more inspiring experience. It is at once evident that your methods and organization are thoroughly well-planned, but there is much more to it than this. Wherever I went from the Deep South to the neighborhood of Washington I found the same virile spirit of dauntless determination. Your young men are truly splendid. You have every cause to be proud of them, and they to be proud of the country and the cause they serve.

Let me now for a moment look back to our experience in this war and see if we may gain from it guidance for the future. I have said that we declared war to defend the sanctity of treaties, and we have tried in the ebb and flow of battle to keep this high purpose clear and constant before our eyes. There have been some dark moments, the darkest probably being those of Dunkirk and the weeks that followed. Then for the first time in our remembered history we as a people faced national extinction. Every horror seemed possible. We walked through the fire. Yet that ordeal strengthened us and brought us a new spirit of fellowship and of endurance and of simple living, which I pray may remain with us long after the peril is passed. We gained then, I believe, a new sense of what our national life could be. Nor shall we ever forget your sympathy and your active help in the days when it needed an act of faith to believe even in our survival.

One incident in particular will be vivid in my recollection to my dying day. It had been my duty as Secretary of State for War at that time to call upon the nation to enroll in a new force the local defense volunteers, since renamed by the Prime Minister the home guard. The men responded in numbers far exceeding our calculation. They were eager to drill and to fight but we had no weapons for them. We had not equipment enough for the divisions of our regular army saved from Dunkirk. Our industry, though working as it had never worked before could not meet this demand. It was then that you made your first great gesture. In a brief span you sent us more than a million rifles, guns, machineguns and other weapons from your arsenals to arm our volunteers. I can recall today the anxiety with which we watched the voyage of those ships, and the relief with which we signaled each consignment safely brought to port by the gallant men of the Royal Navy and the merchant marine. Those weapons might well have meant the difference between life and death for us. Such acts of generosity and faith mean more in the history of two nations than all the speeches of statesmen or the labors of diplomacy.

In that year when we stood alone against Germany and Italy we had to take great risks. The collapse of France, with her overseas empire, had laid bare our strategic positions, not only in Europe but over the whole of that area loosely called the Middle East, and in the Far East also. As a result, perilously weak as we were at home, we had to take armed divisions from our under-manned citadel of Britain and send them round the cape to reinforce our threatened defenses. Even so, we tried to keep faith with our friends.

Pledge to Greece

We had given our pledge to the people of Greece, and the world will not forget their epic resistance. We, for our part, did all in our power to help them. We failed, but that was not a failure of which we shall ever feel ashamed.

It was in this same spirit that, on behalf of our Chinese Allies, we reopened the Burma Road in 1941. Let China not misdoubt us. We shall not forget how for years she resisted aggression single-handed. The Japanese brought her all the terrors of mechanized warfare, and she had little with which to oppose them. They burnt her cities. They tore from her large tracts of territory. They forced her armies inch by inch into the interior. But never for a moment did her resolution falter. Never has there been a thought of parley, and China no longer stands alone. The day will come when the Burma Road will once again be open. It will carry to China an ever-increasing volume of supply, which the efforts of your country and mine are turning out daily from the assembly lines.

As I have explained, with the fall of France we lost our reserves of material which had been transported there. If we were to rearm our trained divisions and to expand our forces and equip them, our own production could not suffice.

It was in such an hour that lend-lease was born, that great conception by which once again the mighty resources of the New World were called in "to redress the balance of the Old." In that hour we knew, finally and beyond a doubt, that we were not alone in the cause for which we stood.

Lend-lease began as a one-way traffic. It brought American tanks and guns and aircraft to the battlefields of North Africa and for the defense of Britain. It brought American ships to strengthen the Atlantic lifeline. It brought American supplies of every kind, wherever they couuld be carried and the need was greatest.

Today the picture is changing. Lend-lease has become the machinery for pooling the war effort of the United Nations, the material equivalent of the combined strategic planning of our armies and navies. It is no longer a one-way traffic. Each nation gives to the others what it can send and what they need. The United States will remain the greatest arsenal of democracy, but Britain in her turn is sending supplies to Russia, to her other allies, to the American forces abroad and even to the United States itself. But if we are glad to take our part in this common effort, we are none the less grateful for what we have received.

Life Hard in Britain

Life is hard for many people in Britain today. Shortages, discomforts, privations even, have been accepted by our people in a spirit of which they have a right to be proud. Yet we have still to ensure that they have a minimum of rations required for total war. We have to supply our fighting men with weapons to wage war to best advantage. We could not do these things without the food produced by your farms and industries and exported to us by your ships.

You have been generous to our people who have come among you. Today we in our turn are happy to welcome your sons, brothers, husbands, and your daughters, too, in our cities and our homes. We are learning from them how alike are our peoples on both sides of the ocean in the things that matter most. London, scarred and seared and blacked-out though it is, yet presents an inspiring sight today. The youth of the world is there, united in the common garb of war. Your young men and ours rub shoulders with each other and with the young men of the Nations united against a common enemy. There they achieve in a short span that national sympathy and understanding which years of diplomatic exchanges could never give. On five continents and seven seas, soldiers and sailors of the United Nations are living and fighting side by side. May they cherish in peace the friendship that they learnt in war. May our young airmen who have renewed an old comradeship of the air, carry that spirit with them on errands of peace. Upon them and their like, upon their friendship with one another, rests both the burden and the hope of mankind. Where our generation failed, I pray that theirs may succeed. It may be our last chance. It may be in very truth "the last best hope of earth."

In the period between the two wars, the intentions of the peace loving nations were excellent, but their practice was weak.

If there is one lesson we should have learned from the distresses of those years, it is surely this, That we cannot shut our windows and draw our curtains, and be careless of what is happening next door or on the other side of the street. No nation can close its frontiers and hope to live secure. We cannot have prosperity in one country and misery in its neighbor, peace in one hemisphere and war in the other. And if we try to have these things, we shall be back on the old road to World War. We shall never find security or progress within heavily defended national fortresses. We shall only find them by the greatest possible measure of cooperation. The United Nations, and in particular the United States, the British Commonwealth, China and the Soviet Union, must act together in war and in peace.

Greatest Peace Aim

The greatest of all peace aims is to ensure that never again shall unscrupulous leaders be able to carry their peoples into war and bring tragedy on the world. We shall accordingly take steps for the physical prevention of this danger by the enforced disarmament of these gangster nations. We must ensure that this protection of peace-loving peoples is maintained in full effectiveness for whatever period may be necessary. We must therefore be ready to protect and maintain whatever settlement we devise. And one thing, I am sure, is, above all, essential. Never again must the civilized world be ready to tolerate unilateral infraction of treaties. For that would be to sap the whole foundation of the secure international life which it is our principal purpose to restore.

We must prosecute the war to a final victory. We must determine together to take steps to ensure that neither Germany nor Italy nor Japan can commit a like aggression again. We can do this if we will. If we do, we will fulfill the first condition of peace.

And I take this opportunity once again to make plain that we have no secret engagements with any country, nor do we seek as a result of this conflict to extend our boundaries or increase our possessions.

We in the British Commonwealth have grown up in the thought of cooperation. Some parts of the Commonwealth—the self-governing dominions—enjoy complete independence, while others are moving toward this goal. Our enemies have looked to this war, as they looked to the last great war, to sound the death knell of this great association. Nothing in the world is more unlikely. The Commonwealth is a voluntary union. Its bonds are the will of peoples and races with a common purpose to travel the same way. Theirs is no static society, shrinking from change or fearful of the future. On the contrary the British Commonwealth is capable of continuing development. We have sought to learn by our mistakes. The British Empire is the first in history to evolve the idea of self-governing dominions. That is an entirely new conception in the world. We believe that it can help us to reach our common aim, man's freedom and self-government under the rule of law. It is in this spirit that we shall administer our trust for the peoples in our empire, whom it is our duty and our pledge to lead to full membership of our community of nations.

I maintain that these principles of our Commonwealth are not of limited application. They are inseparable from the kind of world for which we are fighting, the kind of world we hope to see. That hope is today gathering strength, in North Africa, the Pacific, China, through enslaved Europe and on the wide plains of Russia.

Today more than ever war is one and indivisible. The enemies of your country are our enemies. A danger to us is a threat to you, as it is a threat to China and to Russia. Let there be no mistake; we shall not rest upon our arms until every one of our enemies has unconditionally surrendered. We, no less than you, and our partner China, have a score to settle with the Japanese; nor shall we cease fighting until that evil growth in the Pacific has been cut back. We shall be with you in this to the end.

When the defense of one is the defense of all, security and peace have no frontiers. Our common safety demands that overwhelming force be brought to bear against the aggressor wherever he may be. And what applies to war applies even more, to the peace that is to come. I can say with confidence that today the men and women of Britain are alive to the fact that they live in one world with their neighbors. Only within an international system which is backed with sufficient force, can the enterprise and liberty of the individual find protection. After the last war the lack of power behind the international system led to the triumph of the dictators. This has more often been said than understood or heeded. On one side we have the idea of a narrow and covetous nationalism which destroys the life of its own people first, and then the life of its neighbors. On the other we have the idea of a close-knit framework of free nations—free as we in Britain and you here understand the world. We believe that it is only within such a framework as this that the individual can rise to the full height of his powers and call his soul his own. And we believe that it has been the world's failure to create such a framework which has twice led to war in our time. This at least is certain: If we do not find the common ground on which to build this time, we shall not have deserved victory.

Any new international authority that we may agree to set up can only succeed if it is backed by sufficient strength. It will not be enough for one country, or even two, to display the qualities necessary to protect the peace. The work will take all that America and Britain, Russia, and China, and the United Nations can offer.

Your country is justly proud of the wide vision and the boldness and youthful vigor with which it thinks and acts. You will not find my countrymen bound by any narrower horizon. In the common performance of this task you will find the peoples of our Commonwealth, for I am sure that in this I can speak for them all, full and worthy partners. You will find in them a toughness, a resolution, an unsuspected fund of energy, a vitality of spirit, such as have more than once surprised the world. Our joint task will be hard. But for our part we are proud of the company with which we march. No one flag, no one government, no one language unite the peoples of our great alliance. We have one passport, freedom; one objective, victory, total and unmistakable; and one purpose, a just and lasting peace.

Overtime Pay Bill Approved

Nears Senate Vote

By Robert W. Harvey

Post Staff Writer

The Senate went into action on two Federal pay fronts yesterday.

In the morning the chamber's Civil Service Committee completed action on the new Federal overtime bill, filed a favorable report and announced plans to ask a vote on the measure before the end of next week.

Later in the day, the Senate amended and passed the House-approved postal pay bill, granting $300 annual bonuses to per annum employes of the postal field service.

Since amendments were made in the latter bill, further House action must be taken before it goes to the White House. The changes, however, were minor and only two in number, and are not likely to hold up the legislation long. They change the expiration date of the bill from the end of the war to June 30, 1945, and change a ceiling on increases for hourly workers from $300 a year to $25 a month.

Before reporting out the overtime bill, the Civil Service Committee approved an amendment offered by Senator Langer (Republican), of North Dakota, aimed at preventing racial discrimination in Government employe unions.

The section denies extra pay to members of "any local union, members of which are employed in any Government agency, which denies membership to any person because of race, color or creed."

No changes were made in the substance of the pay bill, which had been approved by the committee earlier.

The measure would continue existing provisions for overtime pay to employes working more than 48 hours a week, but would provide a $300 minimum for the overtime wages. Employes drawing $5000 or more a year may get overtime, but only on the $2900 portion of their salary. Nonovertime employes are given a flat $300 bonus.

The measure will cost almost 23 million dollars more than the bill now in effect, the committee report stated, attributed to removal of the $5000 ceiling, fixing of the $300 floor and provision of adjustments for a number of special groups which missed out on the current law.

Provisions of the pay bill, which will replace the temporary act due to expire April 30, were outlined last night in a radio address by Senator Mead (Democrat), of New York, on the Federal Index program.

Mead explained that the measure was not designed as an ordinary "salary raise," but rather aimed at providing U. S. workers "with additional compensation for a longer work week, for the purpose of enabling them to meet wartime living costs."

Annapolis Graduates to Receive Aviation Indoctrination Course

Secretary Knox announced yesterday that plans to establish a large naval air training base near Annapolis for schooling midshipmen in aviation have been "indefinitely postponed."

Instead, the Secretary revealed, all Naval Academy graduates will take a 10 week aviation indoctrination course at the Naval Air Station, Jacksonville, Fla., after graduation and before reporting for duty at sea.

"The purpose of the aviation indoctrination school," Knox said, "is to provide the newly commissioned officers with a thorough knowledge of the employment of aviation in naval warfare."

Secretary Knox said the decision not to build an air training station on a site selected near Annapolis at this time was based on the excessive cost of the land and the time required to build such a base.

He was asked if the objections of the land-owners involved—some of them prominent—was responsible for the decision.

"Not the objections," he replied, "but some difficulties were encountered as to acquiring the land. The site selected was found to be very expensive."

Instruction in aviation is already a part of the Naval Academy curriculum, but there is no practical application of the theories taught. The new program is intended to remedy that.

Will Study All Angles

The academy graduates, in two groups of 375 each will study air navigation, the operation of aircraft motors, tactical problems and flying technique during the 10-week course at Jacksonville. They will fly with pilots in mock combat operations, including dive bombing, and torpedo bombing.

They will not, however, be trained as pilots. However, after two years at sea, the young officers will become eligible for regular flight training.

Vice Admiral Frederick J. Horne, vice chief of naval operations, said the air indoctrination program is a permanent addition to the Navy training of officers and not just a wartime measure.

"The basic reason for the step," he told reporters, "is that aviation is an integral part of the Navy and all naval officers should have a knowledge of aviation matters."

The Navy announcement said that the academy graduates would have two weeks' leave after completing the course at Jacksonville and before reporting for duty with the fleet or the Marine Corps. The first class will be assigned to Jacksonville June 14.

Nazi Asks to Meet U. S. 'Ace' Who Downed Him—He Does

By Inez Robb

International News Service Staff Writer

Allied Headquarters in North Africa, March 26.—This is the story of a young American fighter pilot, who in his first combat, shot down one of Germany's foremost aces.

The American pilot cannot be named at the moment, but Lieut. Marion A. Hannum, of Washington, D. C., and Lieut. Arthur Ensler, of New York City, who are in his squadron, tell the story with considerable pride.

So heavy with decorations that it almost took two parachutes to save him, the German pilot bailed out and was captured behind American lines, slightly injured. He was rushed off to an American hospital for treatment and there demanded, in excellent English, that he be permitted to talk with the great American ace who had managed to shoot down so great a German hero.

The German was so insistent in his demand that the commanding officer finally asked the young American pilot would he talk to the flier.

The American boy, still dazed by his initial victory, said he would. This was his first experience in a forward area since landing in Africa. Heretofore, he had been at a rear base where a make-shift field had been improvised out of a big pasture.

Unfortunately, during the first four weeks of operation, it had been impossible to keep the Arabs and their ubiquitous miniature donkeys from suddenly heading across the runway in front of planes landing and taking off.

Eventually, the American boy stood face to face with the German ace. The latter saluted smartly, and demanded to know what the American pilot's score was in the war.

The American boy truthfully and earnestly drawled:

"Why, up to the present time Mr., I got one cart, two donkeys and you."

Chileans Give Wallace Ovation

Santiago, Chile, March 26 (AP).—One of the largest and most enthusiastic crowds in Chilean history, estimated at 100,000 persons, cheered Vice President Wallace when he appeared tonight shortly after his arrival here on his air tour of Latin America.

"Never have I seen such a warm reception," said Wallace as he stepped to the balcony of a military club, which will be his residence here, to receive a tremendous ovation. "It is a symbol of the force of true democracy shared alike from left to rightists."

Capital Transit Net Gains 4%; Taxes Up 142%

By S. Oliver Goodman

Net income of the Capital Transit Co. in February totaled $125,202, a gain of 4.1 per cent over the $120,224 in the same 1924 month.

The surprisingly small gain in net income came in the face of continued record traffic and a 40.7 per cent jump in operating revenues. Sharply higher taxes absorbed a large part of the increased revenues.

Operating revenues for the month totaled $2,198,769, up $636,146. Operating taxes soared 142.8 per cent to 0464,563 as compared with 191,325 last year. Operating expenses and depreciation were up 29.2 per cent and 34.1 per cent respectively.

For the first two months this year Capital Transit's net income was $263,104 as compared with $246,336 in the same 1942 period, or a gain of 6.8 per cent. Revenue passengers in the first two months totaled 67,005,358 as compared with 45,770,328 last year, or an upsurge of 46.4 per cent.

Business Briefs Of D. C. Interest

C. & P. Net Rises Sharply

Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. yesterday reported February net income of $230,294, as compared with $110,868 in the same month last year.

Operating revenues were $1,911,053, against $1,565,002 a year ago, while operating expenses amounted to $1,344,062, against $1,217,094 in February, 1942. Taxes for the month were estimated at $290,544, as compared with $139,351 last year.

For the first two months net income aggregated $468,004, against $275,124 in the 1942 period. There were 360,972 telephones in service at the end of February, an increase of 1140 over the previous month.

Telephone users made 38,405,000 calls during the month, or 1,126,000 less than in February, 1942.

Store Sales Off 5% Here

Washington department store sales in the week ended March 21 were 5 per cent less than in the same 1942 week, the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond reported yesterday. However, local dollar volume in the four weeks ended March 21 was 4 per cent heavier than in the same 1942 period.

The fifth Federal Reserve district as a whole showed a 1 per cent sales drop for the week and an 8 per cent gain for the four-week period.

Joint Session Set Today

Current trends in pension plans will be discussed today at a luncheon meeting in the Mayflower Hotel of bank fiduciaries and insurance trust officers.

Meyer M. Goldstein will address the joint session of the Fiduciaries Section of the District Bankers Association and the Washington Life Insurance Trust Council. Mr. Goldstein is a member of the law and legislation committee of the National Association of Life Underwriters.

Western Union Promotions

Appointment of Charles E. Davies and R. Carlisle Folger as assistant vice presidents of the Commercial Department of the Western Union Telegraph Company was announced yesterday.

For ten years, Mr. Folger has been assistant to the first vice president, Commercial Department, at New York. Mr. Davies, with headquarters at New York and Washington, D. C., will be in charge of operation and personnel and will serve as liaison with the various governmental departments.

Chain Store Sales Drop

The dollar volume of January chain store and mail order sales was 3 per cent under the record of the corresponding month last year, the Commerce Department reported yesterday.

The department estimated total January sales at $1,046,245,000 on the basis of a representative sample of the trade.

After allowance for one less business day this January, total sales for the month were about the same as last year. The department added, however, that since retail prices this year were about 10 per cent higher the amount of goods sold was less than in January, 1942.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, March 26 (AP).—News from Washington was the sole influence on grain prices today, whipping the market lower at the start when the Senate sent the Pace bill back to the Agricultural Committee, and then driving it higher toward the close when the Senate passed the Bankhead bill.

Trading was at a considerably more active pace than in recent session, and the market made quick reversals a number of times in line with the flow of news from the Nation's Capital. Crop reports and statistics at major terminals were ignored.

At the close wheat was unchanged to ¼ higher, May 1.45@1.46⅛; July 1.45½; corn was unchanged at ceilings, May 1.01; oats advanced ¼, and rye was ¼ lower to ¼ higher.

Range follows:

Atlantic Gulf & West Indies Steamship Lines and subsidiaries in a preliminary report for 1942 indicated net income of $3,575,471 compared with 2,816,177 in 1941. Latest income included nonrecurring profit of $3,318,125 (net), representing principally profit from disposition of capital assets and purchase of the company's obligations and was after taxes and a $752,000 provision for contingencies. Income in 1941 included $1,213,965 profit from disposition of capital assets and was after a $265,000 provision for contingencies.

Receiver Is Asked

Buffalo, N. Y., March 26 (AP).—A complaint asking appointment of a receiver for the Great Lakes Transit Corp. and seeking a ruling that the company had "illegally" engaged in the egg dehydration business has been filed in Federal Court by Ormond E. Laird, Minneapolis, a preferred stockholder.

Margin Trade Forbidden in 'Penny' Stocks

By the Associated Press

New York, March 26.—The New York Stock Exchange announced today that, effective April 1, purchases of securiteis selling below $5 may be made for cash only.

The new regulation, prohibiting margin trading in the so-called "penny" stocks, was interpreted by brokers as a step to check speculation in low-priced issues which have been traded in large volume in recent active markets.

This is the first time the stock exchange has taken such action since a similar regulation was put in effect in August and September of 1933.

The exchange announced:

"The board of governors at its meeting on Thursday revised the general margin rule of the exchange to provide that on and after April 1, 1943, purchases of securities selling below $5 may only be made on a cash basis.

"Customers who purchased such securities prior to April 1, 1943, will have until June 1, 1943, to make full payment."

The new rule applies to bonds, as well as stocks, and, and in the case of bonds, applies to those selling under $5 per $100 face value. Since most bonds trade in units of $1,000 face value, it means that cash must be paid for such bonds selling under $50.

The present margin requirements, under Federal Reserve System regulations, provide that the customer must pay 40 per cent of the purchase price. On that basis, he would have to put up $1.60 to purchase a $4 stock. After April 1 he will have to put up the full $4.

The exchange announcement said many member firms already apply higher margin requirements to securities selling below $5 than regulations require, and the new action will result in uniform margin policy.

The last time a similar regulation was applied was during a wave of speculation in the alcohol stocks in the last months of prohibition.

Martin Aircraft Co. Nets $6,658,809 on $337,556,000 Sales

Baltimore, March 26 (AP).—The Glenn L. Martin Aircraft Co. announced today a consolidated net income of $6,658,809.68 for 1942, computed after all charges and taxes were paid.

This amounted to $6.01 per share on 1,107,022 shares of outstanding stock, the report said, compared with net earnings of $5.24 per share during 1941.

In a letter to the stockholders, Glenn L. Martin, president of the company, disclosed that sales for 1942 showed an increase of approximately 500 per cent over 1941. Net sales of $337,556,000.17 reported by the company for 1942, Martin said, represented actual deliveries of completed products except for the sum of $93,734,750.59 representing costs and earned fees under cost-plus-fixed fee contracts held by the company and its Midwest subsidiary.

Sales for 1941 were $67,237,698.71.

Martin reported the company expended $117,722,061.96 for labor during 1942, the largest single expenditure. This total, he said, was over 2¾ times the corresponding figure of 1941."

Joe Baksi Beats Dorazio in Slugging Match

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

The Nats apparently are more honored in Cleveland than in their own bailiwick. There has been no great rush by the natives to acclaim the 1943 Washington team as a first-division threat, but from Manager Lou Boudreau of the Indians comes this statement:

POVICH

"I'd say the clubs the Indians have to beat this season are the Yankees, Browns and Washington, in that order."

Until Boudreau checked in with that observation, the Nats had not been rated very important in the scheme of things to come in the American League race. Clark Griffith, to be sure, had been raising a lone thin voice demanding recognition for his rebuilt ball club, and hinting that it would develop as sort of wonderful, but the Nats' have not been very well-esteemed generally.

Boudreau, however, must be impressed, even from as far away as Lafayette, Ind., where his Indians are training on the Purdue Campus. The young Cleveland manager, in prophesying a first-division berth for the Nats, rated them better than the Red Sox, Tigers, White Sox and Athletics. That, despite the fact they finished seventh last season.

Griffith has been contending all along that his Nats were destined for better things this season. He has been pointing out that his club made its sacrifices to the armed services in 1942, when Cecil Travis and Buddy Lewis, were taken from the team. Most of the other clubs were virtually intact last season, he says. "Now they're feeling the pinch," Griffith adds. "They're coming back to us."

Despite the inclination to kiss the Nats off as another second-division club, there are, indeed, factors that demand more respect for Washington than in recent seasons. Manager Ossie Bluege, for instance, has been saying that he wouldn't trade his outfield for any in the league.

Bluege may be correct in his estimates of the Nats' outfield. Of the five leading hitters in the league last year, the Nats' outfield contains no less than two—Stan Spence and George Case, who hit .323 and .320 respectively. There isn't another outfielder remaining in the league who hit as much as .300 in the majors last year.

There isn't much doubt that the Nats have added punch. Bob Johnson, who rounds out the outfield trio, brings to the club a record of having batted in 80 runs last year with the weak-hitting Athletics. That is more runs than any Washington player produced in 1942.

Stability has been added to the Nats' infield, too. Last year, Bucky Harris never knew where his next third baseman was coming from. For the first couple of months he struggled along with Bobby Estalella, an outfielder, at third base. For the next two months, he was so desperate he called in Roy Cullenbine from the outfield to take a shot at third. He finished up with Ray Hoffman, a second baseman from Charlotte, playing third.

Ossie Bluege knows before the season starts that Gerry Priddy will play third base for the Nats, barring injury. Priddy demonstrated his ability to play the bag with the Yankees last year and Bluege reckons that what was good enough for the Yanks will be good enough for the Nats. Priddy's .280 batting average won't hurt the Nats, either, particularly with his penchant for banging out that long ball.

The rest of Bluege's infield, if not collectively hot, at least holds out promise of improvement over last season. Mickey Vernon, after two great seasons, slumped last year, and Bluege thinks he is on the rebound. Shortstop Johnny Sullivan, a green pea when he came to the club in mid-season, was learning how to play the position at the finish, and proved one of the club's best clutch hitters. George Myatt, from Columbus, will battle it out for the second base job with Ellis Clary, who hit .278 in the last 30 days of last season.

The most disturbing factor for Bluege would seem to be the club's catching, but only from an offensive standpoint. Jake Early and Tony Giuliani, from Minneapolis, are completely acceptable defensively; in fact Early is sort of terrific in his catching paraphernalia, with the best throwing arm in the league and an inspiring line of chatter. However, Jake was a .204 hitter last year, and Giuliani batted only .218 in the American Association.

Bluege's pitching could be better than it was last season despite the loss of Sid Hudson to the Army. If it isn't better, then the Nats are sunk. However, Dutch Leonard, who won only two games in 1942, due to a broken leg, is again in good health, and Bluege is fortified with no less than five guys from Double A league pitching staffs, Mickey Haefner, Owen Scheetz, Ewald Pyle, Milo Candini and Dewey Adkins. The Nats are shaping up as a better ball club in a league that is considerably cheaper.

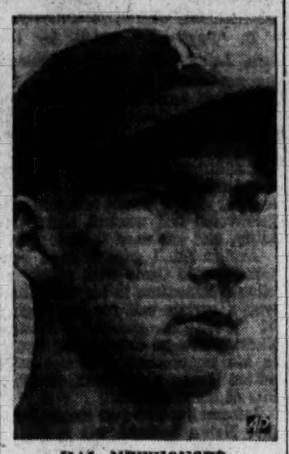
Newhouser Gets Draft Board Call



HAL NEWHOUSER

By the Associated Press

Evansville, Ind., March 26.—Pitcher Hal Newhouser, 21-year-old Detroit Tiger southpaw who was classified 4-F last summer, received word today from his Detroit board of a forthcoming call to report for another physical examination.

With the Tigers idle because of weather, Manager Steve O'Neill took a check of camp casualties before the opening exhibition games here tomorrow and Sunday with the Chicago White Sox. Pitcher Hal White and Outfielder Roger Cramer are out of action, and Catcher Paul Richards and Pitcher Murral Hewitt joined the hospital list today.

'Pilot' Dickey Reports

Asbury Park, N. J., March 26 (AP).—Bill Dickey, veteran New York Yankees' catcher, reported today at the Yanks' training camp and immediately went to work with the squad. Weighing 185 pounds, Dickey indicated that he will not miss the two weeks of conditioning that he lost while arguing with President Ed Barrow about a salary cut.

Dickey said he had flown his own plane for a total of 210 hours in the air and, but for restrictions on civilian flying, he would have flown here from Little Rock, Ark.

Butcher Accepts Terms

Pittsburgh, March 26 (AP).—Max Butcher, big right-handed pitcher of the Pittsburgh Pirates, agreed to terms today and will leave Sunday for training camp at Muncie, Ind., President William E. Benswanger announced.

Benswanger also disclosed that Maurice Van Robays, hard-hitting outfielder, had signed his 1943 contract at camp.

Butcher refused to sign earlier because Pirate officials had based his new contract on a record of five victories and eight defeats last year, rather than his good "earned runs per game" mark, he said.

Phils Get Two Bears

Hershey, Pa., March 26 (AP).—The two players acquired by the Philadelphia Phillies from the New York Yankees in final settlement of the Nick Etten deal are Pitcher Al Gerheauser and Catcher Tommy Padden, both of the Newark Bears.

Northwestern Freshman Sets World Tank Mark

Columbus, Ohio, March 26 (AP).—After equalling world record time twice this afternoon in qualifying preliminaries of the 50-yard free-style, Henry Kozlowski, 19-year-old Northwestern University freshman from Chicago, clipped a half-second off the mark with a 22.1 performance in winning the National Collegiate Athletic Association championship tonight.

Kozlowski, born in this country of Polish parents, topped the world record time of 22.6 seconds set in 1923 by Duke Kahanamouku of Hawaii and equalled by Peter Fick at New York in 1934.

A product of Lane Tech, Chicago, Kozlowski holds the national scholastic free-style record for 100 yards at 52.4 seconds.

Altrock Sees Rookie Pyle As a Starter

Mickey Haefner Also Praised by Nick; Pitchers Toil in Bat Drill

Nick Altrock, a clown in the eyes of baseball fans around the circuit, but an astute judge of pitchers in the estimation of Clark Griffith, yesterday predicted sure-fire success for Ewald Pyle, skinny left-handed rookie of the Nats.

Pyle, up from Toledo, where he won eight games and lost five last season, has earned the praise of Altrock, who declares "he's a cinch to have a regular job on this club."

Pyle and Mickey Haefner, only left-handers on the Nats' pitching staff, have been given into the particular charge of Altrock, who was some shucks of a southpaw himself with the White Sox when he pitched the Hitless Wonders of 1906 into a pennant and World Series triumph.

Showed Lots of Stuff

"I don't understand how the St. Louis Browns let a fellow like Pyle get away," said Altrock. "He has showed me more stuff than a lot of fellows who have been pitching in the big leagues for years.

"Pyle has more of a free-and-easy motion than any rookie I've ever seen," added Altrock. "If I do say so myself, he reminds me of my own delivery when I was pitching. Never had a sore arm in my life, and a fellow like Pyle doesn't figure to be bothered by soreness with that kind of a motion."

The other bosses among the Nats share Altrock's enthusiasm for Pyle, incidentally. The tall fellow has lately taken to a knuckle-ball that may not impair his chances of gaining a regular job.

Little Haefner also has an admirer in Altrock. "You can put him out there in the box and not worry about your pitching," said Nick. "He doesn't figure to give you a bad game."

The Nats were blessed with Florida-like weather for their workout yesterday and Ossie Bluege took full advantage of it, sending his athletes through the longest workout of the season.

The pitching machine was dispensed with because of the eagerness of the pitchers to work out from the mound. Virtually every man on the staff took a turn, including Milo Candini, who came to camp with a sore arm.

Patient of Mike Martin

Candini has been the particular patient of Trainer Mike Martin. He reported yesterday that "my arm hasn't felt as good in two years." The husky right-hander the Nats obtained from the Yankees was cutting loose with one of the camp's fastest pitches.

The Nats will be encountering the stiffest opposition of any club in spring training when they move to Norfolk next week for five games against the U. S. Naval and Air Base teams there. . . . The Naval Base team, which already boasted Don Padgett, ex-Cardinal; Phil Rizzuto, ex-Yankee; Eddie Collins, ex-Athletics; Freddy Hutchinson, ex-Tiger; Walter Masterson, ex-Nat, and other major leaguers, now has been bolstered by the addition of Dom DiMaggio, late of the Red Sox. . . . Scout Joe Cambria is enthused over the fielding of his protege, Joe Jacobs, from the Wichita sandlots . . . the lad moves with ease and grace around shortstop, but has startled nobody with his hitting. . . . Jim Mertz, labeled the fastest pitcher in the Southern Association last year, was showing his speed on the mound yesterday. . . . Stan Spence, George Case, Johnny Marion and Jake Early were the prize swatters during the batting practice. . . . Bob Johnson is expected to check in from the Coast today for his first workout. . . . Several hundred fans were in the stands yesterday until Bluege dismissed the squad at 2:30 p. m.

Fans Protest, But Verdict Is Unanimous

Philly Vet Loses Two Rounds Due to Low Blows; Joe Survives Cut Eye

By Al Costello

Post Staff Writer

Joe Baksi of Wilkes-Barre, was given a unanimous 10-round decision over the veteran Gus Dorazio of Philedalphia, as 2101 fans shouted their disapproval, showered the ring with popcorn, fresh grapefruit (unrationed) and other debris, but the decision appeared somewhat justified.

Dorazio came fast in the final rounds and appeared to have all the better of it, but what doubtless was forgotten was the fact that twice the Philedalphia vet was penalized, in the first and third rounds, for low blows.

Also, Baksi was piling up points in the early rounds which, later, were to turn out to be his salvation. And as Announcer Jimmy Lake gave the unanimous call, arrived upon by Referee Charley Reynolds, and Judge Frank Schuyler and Bob Eller, Frankie Palermo, Dorazio's manager pulled a Joe Jacobs and hopped into the ring in vociferous protest.

Baksi Opens Fast

Baksi opened up with a two-fisted attack in the very first round which had Dorazio either shaky or worried or both. And then Gus unloosed his unintentional low punch, he had lost that round by a very wide margin. Again in the third, the Wilkes-Barre boy took command and again received a below the belt sock. That round was costly, too, as Dorazio, just before the bell, opened a nasty looking cut over Baksi's eye, which turned out to be a perfect target of which Dorazio took full advantage.

Baksi had a slight margin in the fourth, lost the fifth and sixth and carried the seventh. Dorazio took both the eighth and ninth and Baksi had slightly the better of it in the tenth. But despite Gus' late rush, those early points Baksi scored and those which Dorazio threw away by low blows, turned out to be the margin of Baksi's victory.

It was a case of a fighter winning more rounds and making a flashier showing yet losing on the point-scoring system. And it was as fine a heavyweight fight, replete with action and toe-to-toe punching as anyone would ask. There should be more like it.

St. Thomas Winner

St. Thomas, Father Divine's disciple of sock, must have felt like the devil as he left-handed one Jimmy Riley, Baltimore Negro, to pieces in one round. The first time St. Thomas threw a right, Jimmy went to the floor, but was saved by the bell at the count of four. He couldn't come up for the second round. It was called a T. K. O. in the second. And ringside patrons mistakenly thought it was Mr. Uline's melting ice that was making the wet feet. The Saint weighed 205; Riley, 188.

Billy Jacobs, 164½, Philadelphia, made a summer breeze out of the You Street hurricane, Kid Wolfe, 167, winning an easy six-round decision. Wolfe was pathetic against the sharp left hand of the Philadelphian.

Jesse Harris, 143, Negro Curtis Bay Coast Guardsman, repeated his six-round decision over Pete Geno, 150½, New York, in the semifinal. Harris was even more decisively the winner this time, but the bout lacked the fireworks of their first meeting. In the opening four, Joe Morris and Hershal Todd, both of the District, fought a rousing draw.

Greg Rice Sets World Record

8 Wisconsin Boxers Move Into Finals

By the Associated Press

Madison, Wis., March 26.—Seven of Wisconsin's Badgers moved into the finals of the annual National Collegiate Athletic Association tournament tonight, the strongest single school contingent ever to go so far in the meet's nine-year history.

The defending team champions qualified five men in tonight's semi-final bouts fought before 8000 fans in the University fieldhouse, the other two men advancing previously. Michigan State and Washington State qualified two each. Five other schools will be represented by single entries in tomorrow's finals in the eight weight divisions.

Zurakowski's teammate, Charley Davey, earned the decision over Jimmy Miragliotti, Virginia, in the second bout on tonight's 11-match card. Fighting at 127 pounds, the pair battled furiously, with Davey building his advantage in the last two rounds.

A series of jolting right uppercuts in the second and third rounds helped Mike Melson, Washington State, to a decision over Robert Finley, Virginia, in a 155-pound bout. In another 155-pound bout Don Miller, Wisconsin, gained the verdict over William Richards, Penn State, by virtue of a sharp left jab and a looping right he used ably in the first round to pile up points.

Stanley Smith, San Jose (Calif.) State, won from Don Niklason, Virginia, in the first of two 165-pound bouts. Niklason, who upset Michigan State's Charles Calkins last night, was unable to cope with Smith's barrage of rights and was on the verge of being knocked out when the fight ended.

Ross Promoted To Sergeant

The Navy said yesterday Barney Ross, former prize fighter and Marine hero credited with killing 22 Japs on Guadalcanal, had been promoted from corporal to sergeant.

Ross is at present in Naval Hospital, New York, undergoing treatment for a recurrance of malaria contracted while fighting in the Solomons.

ClipsIndoorMark With 8:50.1 Time; G. U. Star Trails

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, March 26.—Gregory Rice, former Notre Dame star, broke his own world's indoor record tonight in the Columbian 2 mile, feature event of the Knights of Columbus games at the arena.

The "Toy Bulldog" was clocked at 8:50.1 faster than his previous mark.

In making track history, Rice won his sixty-fourth consecutive race. He lapped the other two contestants, Glen Masten of Colgate, the intercollegiate champion, and Dave Williams of Georgetown. Masten finished second with Williams trailing the field.

Herb Thompson of Jersey City, national indoor sprint champion, established a new world's indoor record for the 45-yard dash. His time of 4.8 seconds clipped one-tenth of a second off the mark set by Percy Williams of Canada February 12, 1929.

Gil Dodds of Boston, 1942 national champion indoors and outdoors, had no opposition in the mile run. The bespectacled divinity student took the lead at the start and maintained a wide margin throughout.

His time of 4:08.7 was not his fastest of the winner but it established a new record for the local meet.

Gerald Karver of Penn State was second and Earl Mitchell, the Millrose games champion who nicked Dodds in the K. of C. meet last year, was a surprisingly poor third. Mitchell was second to Dodds in the Chicago relays last week.

Fordham's crack team won the mile intercollegiate relay in 3:35.6. Villanova was second, Colgate, third.

The University of Michigan's two mile relay team won its fifth consecutive race, decisioning Fordham. The winning time was 7:49.5.

James Milne of Michigan State attained 6 feet, 5½ inches to top the field in the high jump.

Texas Five, Wyoming in West's Finals

Kansas City, March 26 (AP).—Texas, co-champion of the Southwest Conference, tonight upset favored University of Washington 59 to 55 to enter the finals of the N. C. A. A. Western Regional Basketball playoff. Wyoming's highly-touted five struggled to a 53-50 victory over Oklahoma in the opening quarter-final. Tomorrow night's winner plays Georgetown in Madison Square Garden (N. Y.) for the national crown Tuesday night.

Wyoming won by the narrowest of margins after trailing throughout the first half and was fortunate that Gerald Tucker, Oklahoma's great star, fouled out with three minutes to play in the first half.

While Tucker was in, the Sooners held the upper hand. He scored the opening goal and had out-maneuvered Wyoming's 6-foot 7-inch center Mile Komenich, for five goals before the whistle blowers banished him.

At one time Oklahoma held a 14-4 advantage and at half time had a 25-22 edge. But with Tucker out, Komenich ran rampant and his seven goals in the final period were too much for the game Oklahomans.

Greco Whips Shans Again In N.Y. Brawl

By the Associated Press

New York, March 26.—Zooming along up the trail toward the head of the lightweight parade, Pvt. Johnny Greco made it two-in-a-row over California Cleo Shans with a 10-round decision tonight at Madison Square Garden in their second blood-an-thunder brawl in a month. Greco weighed 135; Shans, 133.

Greco had his guns set on a knockout all the way, but though he floored Shans once and staggered him on at least three other occasions, he failed to explode the block-buster in winning by a clear-cut margin.

It was probably as much the Canadian soldier's inexperience at applying the "crusher" to an injured opponent, as it was Shans' condition and infighting ability, that Private Johnny had to be satisfied with the unanimous verdict instead of a knockout in a fast punch-party from start to finish.

At the end, the Associated Press card gave eight rounds to the little soldier from Montreal and two to the California Negro.

It was obvious to the noisy, roaring crowd of 15,011, who contributed to a gross gate of $47,214, that Greco was pulling the trigger on his Sunday shots. He caught Cleo with a right hand bomb midway of the opening heat and Shans went back on his heels.

But right then it also became apparent that Greco just hadn't been in the business long enough to know what to do when he had a rival on the way to dreamland. He tore in, swinging wildly, as Cleo went to close quarters, and most of Johnny's punches sailed around Shans' head or bounced harmlessly off his arms.

In the dressing room after the fight, it was learned Greco suffered an injury to his left hand. The extent of the injury could not be learned pending examination by a physician.

Georgetown Victory Great Strategical Triumph for 'Rip'

Hoya Coach Devised Plan to Shackle John Mikan, De Paul's Great Scorer

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Post Staff Writer

New York, March 26.—Georgetown University's magnificent basketball club deserves all the nice things everybody is saying about it, but in the Hoyas rise to the Eastern Division Championship of the N. C. A. A. one semibald fellow has been slightly overlooked and underpublicized. He's just the coach, Elmer Ripley, a pro courtman—1908-'30.

That crunch, crunch, crunch Washingtonians heard this morning was the New York sportswriters, the big-shot coaches, etc., eating a lot of words after Georgetown's victory over DePaul a real coach's triumph. Ripley had his night in the Hoyas' upset triumps and he was the happiest man in New York—or anywhere—as he received congratulations.

Had Toughest Assignment

After Georgetown beat N. Y. U. in the first round of the playoffs Ripley realized his Hoyas had their toughest assignment of the season against DePaul. The Chicagoan's big center, 6-feet 9-inch John Mikan was the best they'd seen, New Yorkers said. He was unbeatable. To give you an idea of his value to the team, DePaul was leading Notre Dame's great club by 11 points when Makin fouled out, and the Irish came back to win by three.

Ripley went to his hotel room after the N. Y. U. game and he went to work doping a defense against the big fellow. He finally tried to sleep but couldn't.

"Rip" rolled and tossed until 5 a. m. Thursday morning when he couldn't stand it any longer and was up, dressed and working against Makin and DePaul again. He called the boys to a morning session and had them back in his room in the afternoon, pouring his plan to beat DePaul into them time and again.

The details of what was probably Georgetown's greatest basketball triumph, the top performance of any District team at any time, have been told. How Georgetown's Big John Mahnken drew Makin away from the basket, where he would knock the goalward-bound Georgetown shots out of the air, and scored around him or fed the ball to little Lloyd Potolicchio, who, behind Mahnken's protection, tossed in five field goals. Lloyd took 11 shots the two games, and made eight.

Every detail of the triumph pointed to Ripley's cunning, which was carried onto the court by his foxy Cocaptains Danny Kraus, the new idol of the Garden fans, and Billy Hassett, the vastly underrated guard.

The regular followers of Georgetown were amazed to see Hank Hyde sub for John Mahnken when the latter fouled out with 10 minutes to play—but it was just another example of Ripley strategy. Hyde, a Chicagoan, had a great high school reputation but had been a washout with the Hoyas, playing only the last minute when G. U. was way ahead or behind—which was seldom.

However, Hyde had played against Makin in Chicago schoolboy ball and he pleaded with Rip to give him a chance. Hank did a beautiful job on Makin and scored one of the most important baskets of the game. All of Ripley's substituting was smart and all-in-all it was just a job of basketball perfection by Ripley, the master analyst and his great bunch of boys.

Nats Boast Knuckle-Ball Brigade on Pitching Staff

No less than four pitchers will be throwing knuckle balls for the Nats this season, headed by the old master, Dutch Leonard. Left to right, Leonard; Owen Scheetz, bought from Minneapolis; Mickey Haefner, from the same team, and Ewald Pyle, from Toledo. Note that the latter pair are southpaws.

It's a Boy, We Think, at The Pigeons'

Peter and Patricia Pigeon of the Post Square Pigeons wish to announce the hatching of a baby son (weight 2 ounces) at 5:55 p. m. yesterday. Mother and son (Haight's guess) are doing well in their second floor apartment on the ledge outside the Sports Department window.

The egg of the month, featured in Pounds Haight's "Dear Boss" letters, is no more. Instead there's a tiny ball of yellow and brown fuzz in the nest of Pete and Pat Pigeon. The blessed event came late yesterday afternoon shortly after Mother Pat relieved Papa Pete for the night shift.

The little one had served notice earlier in the day that he wanted "out." Pete, sitting on the nest, was seen to rock occasionally and the Sports Department gang, who have been studying up on pigeon habits of late, concluded that the action could mean but one thing.

When Pete arose from the nest to turn the job over to Pat, the youngster's mouth, appearing as wide as the Massachusetts Avenue underpass, was poked through the shell.

A half hour later, Pat wobbled off the nest and there was Junior safe at home in a cradle of eggshell splinters. Pat looked him over, held her head high, stepped into the nest, reached out her left wing with a sweeping motion as if she were raking in $20 poker chips and the little one disappeared from view.

Pete returned just before sundown. He was all a-flutter and took off down Pennsylvania Avenue. Haight, who understands pigeon English, explained last night that Pete had gone down by the Capitol to find cigar butts to pass out to his Sports Department friends.

Throng Acclaims 'Pagliacci' And 'Cavalleria Rusticana'

By Ray C. B. Brown

Fortune Gallo presents the San Carlo Opera Company in Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana" and Leoncavallo's "Pagliacci" on Friday night in the National Theater. The casts:

CAVALLERIA RUSTICANA

Santuzza	Mobley Lushanya
Turiddu	Sydney Rayner
Lola	Flora Shennan
Alfio	Stephan Ballarini
Mamma Lucia	Gladys Zeiher

PAGLIACCI

Canio	Aroldo Lindi
Nedda	Anna Garroto
Tonio	Mostyn Thomas
Silvio	Stefan Kozakevich
Beppo	Francesco Curci

Conductor, Carlo Peroni.

Again the National Theater was thronged last evening when the San Carlo Opera Company staged the popular double bill of "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Pagliacci" under the energizing direction of Carlo Peroni. Both of these swiftly moving tragedies were performed with an impassioned realism appropriate to their status as the pioneers in the "verismo" style, and the tension was excellently sustained. The house was cordial and demonstrative, and none of the singers could complain of a cool reception or of an unsympathetic indifference, and all of them deserved the applause they received.

BROWN

Mobley Lushanya was a stirring Santuzza, whether in the moods of heart-broken repentance, smouldering resentment or flaming jealousy. She met the demands of the role with temperamental fire, and her voice was surcharged with emotional color. Sydney Rayner as the exasperated Turiddu gave a vigorous characterization of the village Don Juan who forgot to count the cost of casting off an old love for a new one.

The Lola of Flora Shennan was marked by a pertness and piquancy sometimes missing from this seconda donna role. Stephan Ballarini was the best Alfio that has come this way for some time, endowing the part with personality and singing with lyric sonority.

In "Pagliacci," which, by the bye, Leoncavallo intended should be performed in one act, as his holograph score in the Library of Congress indicates, the role of Nedda was taken by a newcomer, Anna Garroto, who is an interesting addition to the company. She acted the part like a little spitfire, and her vivacity is one of her assets. Her voice had warmth and flexibility, and she used it discreetly.

Aroldo Lindi gave a good performance of Canio with plenty of vibrato lamentoso in his voice, and won a curtain call for his singing of "Vesti la giubba." Mostyn Thomas was an outstanding figure in his impersonation of the half-witted Tonio, ready with effective bits of histrionic skill.

Information has just reached me that Helen Scofield was suffering from laryngitis when she sang the role of Gilda on Thursday night, carrying out her assignment courageously despite that handicap. She has my sympathy and my regreats that I did not know of her predicament at the time. May she soon have an opportunity to be heard here in the best of voice.

Slaughter Permits Available Daily

Persons or firms engaged in slaughtering stock for sale in the District, Alexandria and Arlington County may secure permits to continue their business at Room 11-E, Agriculture Department Building, on any day except Sunday, between 7 a. m. and 3:30 p. m. The permits must be obtained by April 1. A recent story in The Post, through a typographical error, erroneously gave the room number as 111-E.

Bonds Reduced For 4 in Army Morale Case

The Government announced yesterday during proceedings in District court to hear motions for reductions in bonds for a number of the defendants in the conspiracy to undermine the morale of the armed forces, that it expected to go to trial before summer.

This was the first indication on the part of the Government, since the lengthy proceedings began of a definite time when the trial was expected to take place.

Joseph Burns, special assistant to Government Prosecutor O. John Rogge, told Justice Jesse C. Adkins that the Department of Justice would present evidence before the April grand jury to seek a third indictment against the 33 persons and one corporation named in the second indictment. Burns said the Government would endeavor to correct the technical error in the previous indictment which resulted in the second count of the indictment being quashed.

Justice Adkins reduced the bond of Frank W. Clark to $1000, Robert W. Lyman to $5000, Victor Boenstrupp, Otto Brennerman and Donald MacDonald, to $2500.

Motions were made by defense counsel that their clients be returned to previous places of incarceration, where they had been held on other charges when arrested on the morale conspiracy indictments.

It was contended that the men could not get the excercise and fresh air in the District jail that was necessary for them to remain in good health.

Shifflett Sentenced For Killing

James Ernest Shifflett, 42, recently convicted on charges of manslaughter in connection with the death August 17 of Mrs. Patti Edwards, yesterday was sentenced to serve from 5 to 15 years in prison.

Before sentencing him Justice Bolitha J. Laws overruled a motion by defense counsel, James Laughlin, that Shifflett be set free because the trial jury really had acquitted him. Laughlin based his motion on the grounds that when the verdict was returned the foreman of the jury, in error, gave a verdict of "not guilty" on the first count of the indictment.

At the time the incident occurred it was explained to the court by the juror that the error was made through a misunderstanding and that because earlier in the trial the first count of the indictment had been dismissed by the court it was believed the jury must mention acquittal on this count when asked its verdict. However, the jury, when polled, returned a verdict of "guilty of manslaughter."

In pronouncing sentence, Justice Laws said he agreed with the verdict of the jury and said he believed it was "just and lenient." Shifflett was tried for first-degree murder, with manslaughter one of the alternate verdicts allowed.

Mrs. Edwards, who was described during the trial as Shifflett's girl friend, was found beaten to death in her apartment, 500 Third Street Northwest.

The Federal Diary

Editor's note: Each Saturday this column is turned over to Federal workers for their views and comments. Send contributions to Jerry Kluttz, editor.

When I read that James Woog had been fired out of the Office of the Chief of Transportation at the War Department for making "two very good suggestions" that would improve the office I was certain that he was a new employe. I have now confirmed that belief.

If Woog had worked in the office a little longer he would have known that for a civilian to breathe an idea that would improve the office is something not to be tolerated for a moment by the military. But if one of the officers gets the idea; well, that's different. The best way for a civilian to get promoted is to say nothing, hear nothing and do only what you're told.

"TRANSPORTATION EMPLOYE."

It seems to me that the Woog case has brought to a head two fundamental problems that must be decided if the War Department is to have an honest-to-goodness suggestion system for its civilian employes. First, we must be assured that the officials want our suggestions and that we won't be fired or penalized in any way for making them. Lieut. Col. Alexander Corey wouldn't have fired Woog if he were sure in his own mind that the generals and the Secretary's office were sympathetic to employe suggestions. The second problem is the use of Army officers as civilian personnel directors. I believe frankly that a civilian who makes the most of civilian methods can get more out of a group of civilians than an Army officer who uses both civilian and military methods of operating.

"CIVILIAN."

Editor's note: Secretary of War Henry Stimson has enthusiastically approved of an employe suggestion plan. Several excellent suggestions from War Department employes have been entered in The Post's Better Government Contest. It's unfortunate that the Secretary's attitude hasn't seeped down to all the employes. Moreover, the War Department recently received congressional approval to give cash awards to employes who do make constructive suggestions and a new and better system is being worked out to get the employe's ideas. The plan will be announced soon. Let's all hope that the action of Lieutenant Colonel Corey in firing an employe who had the imagination and initiative to make suggestions on improvements in the War Department is an isolated case that won't be repeated.—Jerry Kluttz.

I have an idea which I believe would improve the Government service. It is one of those intangible matters which, if properly carried out, could mean so much to the employes in terms of morale and subsequent accomplishment.

My story goes back to college days. We had a prof who took the time and effort to write brief notes of appreciation and congratulations at the end of each school year to his outstanding students. These notes were stamped and posted and delivered to the students' dwellings in the regular mail.

Perhaps this was a small thing to do, but I can testify that it came to mean much to the students. It was a gracious act and it resulted in a close, strong feeling between this teacher and his students. Our college was a large one and the usual prof-student relationship was rather impersonal.)

Nine months after completing my first year in the Federal service I receive my efficiency rating. It was "1," the highest rating possible. My rating came to me on a printed sheet and was handed to me by a clerical worker with the comment, "Some rating!" (Three per cent of our workers received the same rating.) No one else spoke to me about my rating. As yet I have received no tangible reward as a result of it.

One good worker in an important war job is worth two or three mediocre or poor workers. We should get the good workers into the important jobs as fast as we can.

Fortunately, the good workers can be identified easily and quickly. While the Government efficiency rating system is not flawless, it certainly is good enough to use for the purpose in mind.

My plan would be to list the best workers according to their skills and regular occupations, and to put the lists into the hands of the war agencies.

It seems to me this plan would have two important values: It would give the war agencies the personnel who could produce, and it would give outstanding workers the feeling that what they did counted and that their efficiency rating meant more than a salary raise every 18 months.

S. H.

We are some of the OPA attorneys upon which there is to be a "housecleaning." We are "frozen" in OPA and are not allowed to transfer to other Government agencies. Yet Mr. Brown states that all of the woes of OPA were due to the "young lawyers" and makes a threat to their existence which is not even veiled.

The majority of lawyers have not come directly from law school but have a substantial background of legal experience behind them. They have given their time and experience unstintingly and have spent long hours at their desks without any thought of collecting overtime.

That was all before the threatened purge. You can't work up much enthusiasm with an ax hanging over your head. Maybe there are too many lawyers in some divisions, maybe there are some "young lawyers" who are incompetent and should never have been given a Government job.

We think Mr. Brown could rid OPA of these people without publicly hurting many capable, conscientious and hard-working lawyers who would be only too glad to be fighting on the real front if they could do so.

Portland, Oreg.—Here's a new recipe for raisin bread—if you happen to be in the South Pacific. Corpl. Earl Howlett explained the concoction in a letter home. Soldiers have found jungle berries that taste like raisins and the bread is then baked in a clay bank oven. Yeast? Just take coconut milk, sugar and salt, age it, and the result is the same, Howlett says.

Walsh Club Seeks Funds Of Lanham

Recreation Setup For Warworkers To Stay Open Till Apr. 10 Pending Plea

The Walsh Club for warworkers, originally scheduled to be closed next Thursday for lack of funds, yesterday was granted a 10-day reprieve by the District Recreation Board while its members determine from Representative Lanham (Democrat) of Texas the possibilities of operating the club with Lanham Act funds.

At a meeting of the War Hospitality Committee and the Recreation Board, it was decided that the club, donated by Mrs. Evalyn Walsh McLean, would remain open with the recreation department money until April 10 so that all opportunities for financing it may be explored.

Recreation Services, Inc., operating agency for the War Hospitality Committee, will present the problem to the budget committee of the Community War Fund on April 5, with an appeal for aid.

Issue Clear Cut

Milo F. Christiansen, recreation superintendent, declared that Representative Lanham's assertion that the act bearing his name was not intended to provide recreational projects in the District was so clearly stated that further means of financing such activities should be suggested by the Texas Congressman.

Before Lanham can reconsider his objections to using Federal funds for such projects, it was emphasized by Recreation Board Chairman Harry S. Wender that he must have "a sympathetic understanding" of the problem.

Wender also produced a telegram sent him by Mrs. McLean to express her disappointment at the club's lack of funds, citing the "desperate and imperative need" for a place where Government workers may meet and feel at home.

Meanwhile Mrs. Alice Hunter and Mrs. Robert G. McGuire of the war hospitality committee, are intensifying their efforts to locate a suitable building for a club for Negro warworkers. Persons who can supply such space are requested to notify Mrs. McGuire at the recreation department, 306 Ninth Street Northwest.

The War Activities Committee submitted a program for "Victory Builders," to be tried out on 10 local playgrounds for Recreation Board approval.

The program contains four achievement tests in physical fitness and community service, three for children from 9 years old through junior high school and the other for young people who have dropped school to take jobs.

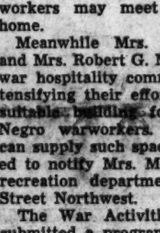
Upon completion of the tests, certificates would be granted and members would be permitted to wear red, white and blue emblems. Pledge required of all applicants is "to develop my health, improve my skills, be mentally alert, and to be loyal and give service to my country."

The approval of the Recreation Board depends upon the trials at the "guinea pig" playgrounds.

In Arlington County, members of the South Arlington War Recreation and Hospitality Committee will present a report to the Parent-Teachers Association in Nellie Custis School Monday at 8 p. m. to show the "immediate need" for playground facilities in that area.

Veteran Sightseer Changes Hobby to Buying War Bonds

George Neumann, chief of the Treasury Department's painters crew and an employe of the department for 42 years, has changed his hobby.



NEUMANN

Inspired by the historical relics that used to be exhibited in the Treasury Department and the sight-seeing tours that were held there, he used to do a lot of sight-seeing himself by automobile.

Today, George Neumann conserves gas and tires and saves the money, too, to invest in War Savings Bonds. The 14 men of his crew are following his example and all of them invest 10 per cent or more of their pay in War Bonds.

"The best part of it," Neumann says, "is that they have all found that the payroll savings plan is a most convenient and systematic way to save money for themselves, in addition to helping their Government at a time when their help is most needed."

Neumann lives at 445 Jefferson Street Northwest.

Personnel Cut In D.C. Budget Hinted

The possibility of shaving District budget requests for new personnel, in the light of Federal mandates for overtime hours, was suggested to a House Appropriations Subcommittee yesterday in a statement from E. Barrett Prettyman, chairman of the Board of Trade's municipal finance committee.

Prettyman pointed out that municipal workers are now on a new 44-hour week, under the Federal overtime bill, and suggested that the extra hours "might well offset requests for increased personnel."

He suggested that the Commissioners ask department heads to re-examine their staffs to see whether adjustments could be made on this line.

Any savings thus made should be retained in the city's surplus funds, he added.

In addition, Prettyman relayed three suggested alterations in budget items to the committee:

(1). Elimination of $76,190 from the welfare budget, since material shortages are likely to block construction of the new Receiving Home for Children for which the fund was marked.

(2). Addition of $5000 to the Health Departments' estimates to provide for repairs and maintenance at Columbia Hospital.

(3). Addition of $79,358 to the Recreation Board's budget for the maintenance and supervision of 14 newly-developed recreation areas.

The three changes would figure to a net increase of $8168 in the total estimates of more than 55 million, the statement said.

Fatal Shooting Of Ex-Page Boy Is Still Probed

Investigation of the fatal shooting, Thursday, of Lyle G. Peck, 15-year-old House of Representatives document room clerk and former page boy, was continued last night after his body was prepared for shipment to Tacoma, Wash., his home.

Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald, coroner, said a temporary certificate had been issued to permit removal of the body but a verdict as to whether the shooting was accidental or suicide had not been reached.

Lyle was found with a bullet wound in his left chest at 3747 Huntington St., Northwest, Thursday morning by an aunt with whom he lived, Mrs. Edith Peck. A .22-caliber rifle from which one shot had been fired was under his body, police reported.

Nutritionist Will Head D.C. Program

Mrs. J. W. Schippman, former nutritionist at the Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston, was appointed chairman of the area nutrition program of the Civilian War Service Division (formerly Civilian Mobilization) Mrs. Henry E. Ewing, chairman of the Nutrition Committee, announced last night.

Besides organizing nutrition committees in the civilian defense areas, and giving food demonstrations in stores and restaurants to show how to make the best use of rationed food, Mrs. Schippman plans to teach a 20-hour nutrition course. A follow-up of the study of eating habits of Government workers, this course will be given every Tuesday and Friday in the Chamber of Commerce Auditorium. The meetings will be open to the public.

Patients Entertained

More than 400 patients of the Naval Medical Center, Bethesda, Md., were entertained under the auspices of the Bladensburg (Md.) Military Order of the Cootie Hospitalization Committee.

Miss Gracie Philips, singer, of Dayton, Ohio, and pupils of dance and dramatics schools participated. Miss Gretchen Rickel of the D. C. Recreation Center presided, and Miss Margaret Scott was the pianist.

Jewish Program Planned

Social Group Studies Baby Broker Bill

A meeting to work out some way of expediting passage of the baby broker bill was held yesterday by District Welfare Director Ray Huff and members of the legislative and steering committees of the Council of Social Agencies.

Three bills to require licensing of all adoption agencies were considered—the original bill as sent to Congress last session, the weakened bill which the insertion of the Schulte amendments caused to die in the Senate District Committee, and a model bill designed to placate the groups which had insisted on the Schulte amendments, yet aimed to retain the force of the original bill.

Another meeting of the committees is planned for next week, after all the members have had time to study the differences in the bills, Huff said. The meeting yesterday discussed general principles of the bills, and the best way to break up exploitation by racketeers in adoptions, but some of the members asked for time to consider all of the details of the proposed legislation.

Among those attending the conference were Mrs. William A. Roberts, executive director of the Council of Social Agencies, and Mrs. Henry Chandler of the Council's Children's Committee.

Refugee to Speak

Mrs. J. M. Colbjornsen, wife of the former Minister of Finance of Norway, will describe her experiences as a refugee Thursday at 8 p. m. at the Francis Asbury Methodist Church, 3146 Sixteenth Street Northwest. The program, under the sponsorship of the Red Cross, will include motion pictures.

QUESTIONS BUT NO ANSWERS—The Bible takes seven words to tell of the creation of the world—"In six days God made the world." Admirable brevity, but, as somebody said, we've been looking for details ever since. Among the lookers is Betty Mullican, sixth-grade pupil at Rockville, Md., who asked The Post some pertinent questions, such as: How did the world start, how has it changed, how is it now, how can we improve it? Obviously the answers were inadequate, for yesterday she still was staring in puzzlement at that ever mysterious orb

U.S. Fighters' Wives to Get Baby Care

Nation-Wide Plans For Maternity Aid By Government Soon To Get Under Way

By Anne Hagner
Post Staff Writer

Wives of enlisted men in all branches of the armed forces soon will be eligible to receive Government funds for maternity care by applying to the District and State health departments, Katharine F. Lenroot, chief of the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor, announced yesterday.

Following congressional appropriation of $1,200,000 to meet estimated requirements until July, plans are being rushed through to give such aid to women all over the Nation, she said. Prenatal and childbirth care will be available to the wife of any private, private first class, corporal or sergeant in the Army, and comparable grades in the Navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard. Officers' wives are not eligible.

In the District, Dr. Ella Oppenheimer, director of the bureau of maternal and child welfare for the Health Department, told a Post reporter that "it is impossible at this time to make any accurate estimate of the amount to be requested for use here.

Government Responsible

"Figures are difficult to ascertain because hitherto wives made applications for assistance only in cases where there was actual need," Dr. Oppenheimer said. "Under this act the Government is responsible for providing maternity care in all cases where it is requested, regardless of need—and we feel certain that an appreciable number will take advantage of it.

"Hitherto Washington has not been unduly pressed by servicemen's families because there are the Army and Navy Relief agencies and the Red Cross, in addition to Walter Reed Hospital, to which they could appeal for aid. The situation here is by no means as serious as in areas where there are tremendous military encampments."

Health Officer George C. Ruhland, from whose office requests for allotments will go to the Children's Bureau, agreed that "it is too early yet to say precisely how much will be requested on the basis of families affected, and need." He and Dr. Oppenheimer plan to confer soon to investigate all angles of the situation here.

Estimate of Births

The Children's Bureau estimated several months ago that approximately 142,500 births during 1943 will be to the wives of men in military service. In the District about 8 per cent of the births are to servicemen's wives.

Miss Lenroot's announcement explained that the Children's Bureau, in answer to evidence of widespread need, granted limited funds to some States several months ago, drawn from the money the bureau administers under the Social Security Act for maternal and child health.

"But in many of the 28 States that last fall set up plans for prenatal, obstetric and postnatal care for servicemen's wives, resources were quickly exhausted and continuance of the program seemed threatened," Miss Lenrott said. "Meanwhile the extent of the need has grown and is now critical in many areas, particularly those surrounding the great Army encampments.

"Many young wives follow their husbands when they are sent to camp and take such lodgings as they can find in neighboring towns. Often these women face childbirth with no resources, even after their husbands have left for overseas. Emergency plans for these women are essential and they must be made on a Statewide basis.

Frank Jaeger Estate Shared By German Kin

Real and personal property left by Frank Jaeger, 78, 757 Eleventh Street Northwest, who died March 17, amounting to $197,127, was left to relatives here and in Germany, according to the petition for probate filed in District Court yesterday.

Washington property, valued at $80,620 and located at 739 and 741 Eleventh Street Northwest and 1012 H Street Northwest, was left in trust for two nephews and a niece, Emil and Carl Jaeger, jr., and Bertha Rugers, all of Washington.

Of $116,507 left in cash, $30,000 was left in the form of a trust fund for two brothers, now residents of Germany, and one-third of that sum to the five children of a deceased brother, also residents of Germany. The will stipulated that these sums should be paid within six months after the war with Germany comes to an end. The balance of the estate was left to numerous friends and relatives. The Ruppert Home of Washington, a home for the aged, was left $1000.

Looking Forward

British Build Child-Care Program

While the nursery school project in Washington marks time under a series of legislative delays, in England today the British government is building the framework for a nation-wide child care program of far-reaching social and educational importance. Miss Lillian de Lissa, president of the Nursery School Association of Great Britain, speaking at the National Educational Association yesterday, drew a vivid picture of achievement in the care and maintenance of children of British working mothers. "To us in England," Miss de Lissa said, "this program is in the forefront of the war effort. If we are to build a better world after the war, our children must be given adequate attention now."

One of the principal concerns of this child care program has been a midwifery service for mothers in service or in industry. Maternity cases are no longer handled in Britain's crowded hospitals, all available space being devoted to war casualties. To remedy this situation, the British Ministry of Health has set up a service in all communities, whose trained representatives deliver and care for the newborn child in the home and give postnatal help to mothers.

Since the war British women between the ages of 18 and 45 have been subject to recruitment for war work. Although mothers with children under 14 are not called, large numbers of them do take part in the war program, either from patriotic motives or from sheer necessity. According to Miss De Lissa, 25 per cent of all married women in England are in industry. Many of them have no adequate housing. One out of every five homes in London has been bombed. A system of "home helpers," paid by the local maternity service, relieves the working mother of worry by tending her home and caring for her young children.

The schools range in character from nurseries for preschool children to day schools for the older ones. They are available to mothers from a few hours to 24 hours every day. Their basic equipment is provided by the Ministry of Health, but the trimmings—toys and games and books—all are produced through the ingenuity of the British people themselves. No toys can be bought in war-torn England today. Miss de Lissa told how raid-raid wardens, fire-fighting volunteers and ambulance drivers fill the time between their duties making toys for the nursery schools from bits of cloth, a stray wheel and pieces of bathroom pipe salvaged from the bombed-out homes. With a severe shortage of space and labor for building the schools, simple prefabricated materials serve and they are erected in available school playground space. "Charming in design," Miss de Lissa said, "and made only of a mixture of sawdust and concrete."

The schools are manned by staffs of specially recruited workers who are given a short training course and are responsible to the child-care expert in charge of each locality. After their training course, the nursery workers become members of the Child Care Reserve, which has a status similar to that of the WRENS or WAFS. Miss de Lissa, who is director of the Gypsy Hill Teachers' College for Nursery School Teachers, in London, commented that enrollment in her school has been three times as large as accommodations could permit.

Miss de Lissa plans to tell the story of Britain's wartime child care program to audiences in the principal cities of the East and Midwest. Her talk in Washington yesterday was the first, with New York next on her itinerary.

Veteran, 83, Ends Life in Bridge Leap

Jacob Karback, 83-year-old retired Army sergeant-major, despondent over his wife's illness, threw himself from the Calvert Street Bridge yesterday.

He was seen to climb to the top of the guard rail about 10:15 a.m. and hurl himself off. He landed beside the roadway in Rock Creek Park, about 100 feet below.

Dr. R. F. Owen, 1601 Argonne Place, Northwest, who was driving across the bridge and saw the leap, was one of the first to reach Karback. He pronounced him dead at 10:32 a. m.

Homicide squad detectives learned that Karback was a veteran of the Spanish-American War and lived in an apartment at 653 Kenyon Street Northwest. His wife, Mrs. Matilda Karback, is critically ill at Walter Reed Hospital, where she recently underwent an operation for the amputation of a leg.

Friends of Karback said he had been despondent for several months, and many times remarked he was "crazy with worry" about his wife.

Police kept the news of his death from Mrs. Karback and notified a niece, Mrs. Anna Bartels, at New Rochelle, N. Y.

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald issued a certificate of suicide.

Gichner Iron Plant Wins Army-Navy E

First D. C. Concern To Receive Honor At Ceremonies Sometime in April

Award of the coveted Army-Navy "E" to the Fred S. Gichner Iron Works, Inc., 1214 Twenty-fourth Street Northwest, first commercial organization in Washington to be so honored, was announced yesterday by the Navy Department.

Formal presentation of the banner signifying excellence in war production will be made at special ceremonies sometime in April, to the company's veteran 73-year-old president, Fred S. Gichner, acting in behalf of scores of employes. At the same time each worker will be given a lapel pin bearing the famed "E," as a testimonial to their personal effort.

Since the entry of America into the war, the Gichner concern has been devoted almost 100 per cent to war work. It has turned out an immense quantity and a wide variety of devices now in use on far-flung fighting fronts, and in addition to its work for the Navy Department has produced quantities of essential items for the Marine Corps and the Army.

The organization has been instrumental in war production since the Spanish-American War, when Gichner first turned his tools and mechanical talent to the service of his country in a small shop with but few employes. In 1917, however, the shop had grown manyfold, and World War I found the organization well equipped both as to machinery and personnel. The company's employes yesterday ventured the opinion that had there been an Army-Navy "E" award at that time, Gichner would have undoubtedly have won it single-handed, for such is their respect for his mechanical genius.

When informed of the award, and of the Army-Navy Department citation expressing "high praise for the efficiency, speed, accuracy and complete cooperation given by every official and employe of the company," Gichner prophesied even greater effort.

"Every one of us," he said, "will be inspired to do an even better job, to turn out even more goods faster, so that the day of the coming of peace will be hastened."

Transit Company Trains 1200 and Has 10 Increase

The Capital Transit Co. trained 1200 new employes last year—and actually increased their personnel force by 10—E. C. Giddings, company executive told the Anacostia Citizens' Association last night. He explained this by saying that the company had lost 700 employes to the armed forces alone.

Following a report on the recent District P. U. C. hearing, a resolution was adopted deploring the injection of personalities into public affairs. A copy of the resolution was sent to the Federation of Citizens' Associations.

Other resolutions were: A request that an obstacle race course be installed at Fairlawn Park; requesting no curtailment of school sports; asking the OPA to keep the ration board in the area open two nights a week until 9 p. m.; approval of the request that the Federal contribution to the District Treasury be made 10 million dollars flat; asking that the original appropriation of the Recreation Department be restored; opposing the renewal of a beer license for the Anacostia Clubhouse; asking the OPA to grade newly canned and old canned goods with A, B, C designations and asking increased bus service to the Southeast section on Saturday night.

Two Sons, Lawyer Share in Humble Vasilikos' Will

The humble symbol of a humble man's rise to national fame, but not fortune, was listed in his will filed yesterday in District court only as "The pushcart which has no value."

Steve Vasilikos was the humble peanut vendor who had made his stand in front of the White House for years and died a few weeks ago almost as much of a legend as some of the tenants of the big white house in front of which he operated.

There were things "of value" in Steve's will however. There was $1500 he left to his "closest friend," Attorney Soterios Nicholson. "I know that he will see that my funeral expenses and other legitimate debts are paid," Steve wrote of his friend in his will, "I pay cash for everything. No other person is close to me in the United States."

In what the petition called "Axis-held Greece" Steve left real estate of undetermined value to two sons, Nicolos and Vassilios.

'Spring-Cleaning Campaign'

By Marianne

There's one thing relatively stable in a changing world—spring houescleaning, a permanently established custom from Hoboken to Paw Paw!

You who did your housecleaning with a flick of a pencil are now surrounded by realistic mops—cleaners—paint bushes. You who are working and have to do your cleaning on the after work-dinner-dishes method are now proving to yourself that cleaning is another wartime necessity that you can take in your stride. You can approach it with manner as scientific and intelligent as an efficiency expert. Whether your major was chemistry or art, there's a place for both in any kitchen!

Joke about your new role—complain—scold — threaten—but we'll wager that the most difficult part you'll have to play in this Victorian drama of 1943 is trying to conceal a good old fashioned burst-at-the-seams-with-pride when all around you your domesticity rises and shines!

On the Surface

An essential weapon in combating the invisible enemies that prey on your painted surfaces is a good paint cleaner. It removes dirt and grease, leaving a polished finish. No rinsing or drying is necessary. Use it to clean your Venetian blinds, too. 60c a quart.

If you prefer the nice smells of spring to the odor of paint, it's a simple matter to add a bottle of this paint smell remover to a gallon of paint. Just pour it in the can, stir, and presto, no more paint odors to take away your appetite. Use it with varnish or enamel, too. 15c a bottle.

The wise housewife is taking a tip from the conservation department and keeping her paint brushes in good condition. They're going to be scarce for the duration. Don't throw away those old brushes that have hardened—a 5c package of this excellent paint brush cleaner will make them usable again. You can also get a preparation to keep your brushes soft and pliable so that you may readily use them over and over again. Put your brushes on a holder made to fit into a jar containing the preservative. It won't harm bristles or setting. 25c a pint for the fluid and 15c for the holder.

Cleaning Awnings

Do your awnings look a little weatherbeaten? Recondition them with a coat of awning paint. It'll conceal dirt and stains, and yet will not stiffen or crack the canvas. Besides all of this, it is sunfast, water repellent, and mildew resistant. You can also use this on sun umbrellas, tents, beach chairs, convertible auto tops, and Venetian blind tape. $1.40 a quart.

Has dampness caused the metal surfaces in your home to rust? Rusting will cause these surfaces to deteriorate unless it is removed. You can remove the rust and prevent future damage with a coating of rust-preventive paint. It will penetrate the many pin holes in metal and form a surface that prevents further oxidation. Use it on porch railings, fences, furnaces, or any metal surface. 85c a quart.

You can prevent future replacement jobs by covering your screens with a screen paint. A thin layer of paint will prevent corrosion of the screens and keep them from breaking. A good investment for 69c a quart.

Several other wonders that paint can perform: There's a stain-covering paint that can be used to kill stains on any type of woodwork. $1.04 a quart.

There's a waterproof blackout paint that's especially good for covering glass. It can be removed easily. 75c a quart.

And there's a luminous paint on the market. Use it for signs, apartment numbers, electric switches, guide lines, as it shines all night after being exposed to light. 49c for one ounce.

Call as at NAtional 4200 Extension 324 between 9:00 and 5:30 and we'll tell you where to find these.

Cultivating

Weeds rob the cultivated plants of water, nutrients, and even space and light that they require. As soon as the soil can be properly worked after each rain, it should be thoroughly hoed or cultivated to kill weeds that have sprouted and to leave the surface in a loose, friable condition to absorb later rainfall. The primary value of hoeing or cultivating is weed control. This cultivation should be shallow so as to avoid injuring the vegetable plant roots that lie near the surface. Although it is desirable to keep the surface soil loose, there is little to be gained by hoeing or cultivating oftener than necessary to keep weeds out of the garden.

Garden crops are subject to attack by a number of insects and diseases. Preventive measures are best, but if an attack ocurs and the city gardener is not familiar with the insect or disease and the proper treatment to protect his crops he is advised to consult the local garden leader or write immediately to the Extension Division of the State College of Agriculture. The United States Department of Agriculture has bulletins containing the necessary information on garden insects and diseases, and these can be procured free upon request.

MEMO TO MISS BROWN

SUBJECT: Spring Tonic

If the idea of dousing your gams in the Gulf Stream has entered your pretty head, now that snowstorms are less frequent, give it brain room—with modifications. Of course, getting to Miami (where there are practically no hotels open to civilians, anyway) is scarcely a possibility, but Washingotn houses perfectly fine places to swim—and even a simulated sunshine which will put a tan on your back and a gleam on your nose.

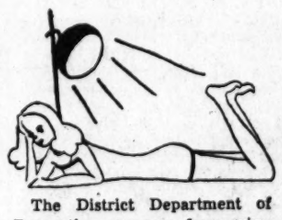
If you nced a bit of trimming down, or even a smidgin of building up, try swimming. Of course, you've probably been paddling your way about lakes and streams, aimlessly, for years, but did you ever stop to wonder how swimming champs get such remarkable constructions? Swimming will put it on and take it off in the right places, all at the same time, in addition to waking up lazy livers and oiling cranky kneecaps.

At the Y. W. C. A. you can get a physical check-up for $1 (a good investment in itself) which entitles you to all of the privileges of the most elegant of beach clubs. For instance, swimming is 25 cents a try, 10 for $2. Wednesdays from 6:30 to 7:30 you can swim for general fun, with coaching thrown in (not literally) at no extra cost. Honest-to-goodness classes for those who haven't advanced beyond the splash and sputter stage begin anew every month and $4.50 pays for six lessons. Private lessons for shrinking violets are six for $10.

Cram a swimming cap into your already overstuffed handbag and stop off at the "Y" on your way from work. Towels, suits and a hair dryer are on hand for you to step into and under, respectively.

If you want that deep beige look, take a sun bath (but painlessly, with a sun you can shut off)—10 for $5. Or follow Mrs. Peyster de Peyster's example and swelter in a cabinet bath for your shape's sake. This is a mere dollar a swelter. Massage is available, too, and a real, rowdy, rough and invigorating one for $2 (six for 10 bucks). You can combine the last two for $2.25 for the works, once; $10 for five times.

The Jewish Community Center has a super-special health club, complete with swimming pool, showers, masseurs, steam room and exercise room which may be used as often as the member likes. Membership in the club is $10 if you're over 18 (and who isn't?).



The District Department of Recreation sponsors free swimming classes and recreational swimming for Negro warworkers at the Dunbar High School pool every Monday, Wednesday and Friday night from 7 to 10 o'clock. Call ADams 2050, Extension 17, for further information.

The American Red Cross is offering life-saving classes, free. Call REpublic 8300, Extension 489, for classes, hours, and such.

If you find yourself in svelte shape and know the principles of gliding through the foam, you can swim amid somewhat greater glamour (and overhead) at the pool in the Ambassador Hotel or the Shoreham Hotel. The latter has a diving board high enough to tolerate the most complicated of triple jack-knife somersaults, if you can do it. Also a lower board for ordinary double or single ones.

Swimming is an unbeatable energizer and even better as a beautifier. It takes more than a little gumption to go to a pool after an eight-hour day (at the risk of dampening your curls, too) but it's worth it. Just give a thought to the fun you'll have splashing and to the new-woman feeling you'll have when you're rubbing yourself dry with a nice, rough towel afterward.

On a more long-term basis, consider the effect of a regular weekly or bi or triweekly swim session on your future appearance in a bathing suit. There's not much sense in going to the beach to get in trim. Get in shape first and then go—with a lot more fun in prospect.

A new and glowing YOU will make the last-year's suit you're patriotically wearing take on a 1943 look. At least, it might help!

Of the outdoor pools, more later, when the weather's warmer.

The Straits of L 85

By Jeanne Contini

There is a new fashion coming up for fall about which we are willing to go on record as a Hosanna Shouter. That is back-fullness. If the laudable efforts toward fabric conservation are carried much further in the direction of the skirt, we will soon be facing a moral crisis. It's all very well to extol the narrow silhouette, but the fact of the matter is . . . the female figure is simply not constructed like a pencil. Most of us have unmistakable hips to say nothing of derrieres.

Until recently, skirts have had a tendency to become alarmingly skimpy. When a woman, plump or slim, sits down, knees crossed or uncrossed, her narrow skirt gradually shrinks until she suddenly looks down to find herself blushing from exposure. She, then, after a few frantic attempts to pull the skirt into place, either pretends not to notice the bare facts or stands up in resignation. We're all willing to make sacrifices for the war effort but this is just plain silly.

Some simple engineering and a little give on the part of leading dress-makers will easily remedy the situation. The best solution we've seen is the addition of several inches (still within the law) to the back of the skirt via drapery, circular cut, or pleats. Any of these manages to keep the front smartly smooth and the walking and sitting easy. Back fullness is much kinder to generous figures than the few compromise gathers we've been accustomed to at the front. It does away with duck-backs and broad beams, and makes for a graceful "going" as well as "coming" view of yourself.

Here's to those designers who care enough for our aplomb to give in on extremes and give out on our skirts.

Imitation Marriage

By MICHAEL STORM

CHAPTER XVI

Scott took a slow, deep breath. He had the thought that he should speak to the policeman he had encountered earlier in the evening. He asked: "May I speak to officer 32?"

"You mean Mulcahy?"

"Yes."

"Just a moment," Scott heard the sergeant's voice bellow: "Mulcahy! On the phone." There was a moment of silence.

"Mulcahy speaking. Who is it?"

Scott said: "I met you earlier this evening Mulcahy. If you remember, you helped me out of a jam on a side street. I'm the boy who took on those two thugs."

"Say, ain't you gone home yet? I thought I told you—!"

"Wait a minute. I am home. And I'm all right; but I've got something to report and I thought you would listen."

Mulcahy's voice was suspicious. "You ain't been hittin' that bottle again, have you?"

"I wish I had. Listen to me; I just saw a submarine."

"You did now? An' where was this sub—on your front porch?"

Scott hunched forward, holding on to the telephone tightly. "Pay attention, Mulcahy. I have not been drinking. There was a U-boat in the channel just off the rocks. I saw it, I tell you. She came up and was flashing signals to someone on shore."

"Did you see anyone?"

"No. There wasn't any answer."

"Wait a minute," Scott heard Mulcahy speak to someone. A minute passed.

Then Mulcahy's voice boomed hard. "Why don't you go to bed, buddy? That place where you're living is no spot for subs to be floatin' around. Now go to bed and don't bother us any more."

Before Scott could expostulate further, the line went dead. He held the instrument for a moment, looking at it angrily and then he put it back on the hook. Naar had been right, he thought.

He said helplessly, "They won't believe me."

She shrugged slim shoulders. "What did you expect? It is late to try to prove anything; and it would be silly to say you could trace the submarine. We have no evidence to support what we saw." She paused and held her gaze straight at Scott. "And now what will you do? The whole thing is right in your lap."

Scott stepped away from the telephone, came over to the fireplace. "It is, isn't it?" he murmured quietly. "But what can I do? Don't you see that whoever was to be here to signal that submarine, is probably waiting for an opportunity? There will be more than one agent. If only the police would search around here, then we might be able to prove something."

"Do you suppose that the police can pick people up and accuse them of expecting signals from submarines? That would be fantastic!"

Scott had to admit to the logic of this. He said: "I suppose it would be."

"And further than that, don't you suppose that whoever was to be here could have made the rendezvous for any number of nights? In other words, that persons could be present whenever the opportunity presented itself, and would be least suspected. Those saboteurs must be careful, you know."

Scott pulled out a cigarette and lighted it carefully. He said: "You sound didactic. Do you often have such positive views?"

Naar shrugged slightly. "I must know of what I am talking or else I won't eat."

Scott smiled and said, "You remember those signals?"

"Yes."

"What do you think that 'Tenth After Nine' meant?"

Your Figure, Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain

For the duration, the hand that wields the can opener will have had a finger in the canning and the home maker will get a kick out of having the folks gather around while she opens the string beans or strawberries.

It's the conviction of Jay B. Nash, Professor of Education at New York University, that such wartime tasks go toward building morale on the home front. He reasons that the more you give to a thing, the more you feel a part of it and the more you are willing to sacrifice for it, and the proof of that is the indomitable spirit of our men on the fighting lines.

Your role as a home maker is more important now than it has been for several generations. Our food industries have to feed our armies first and it is up to you to take over more of the work involved in assuring your family of good nutrition. Our manufacturers who supplied such wonderful labor saving devices for the home are now making parts for guns and planes. You may have to work harder.

Knowing that what you are doing is essential acts as a spur to energy. But to keep going, you must have reserve vitality. Any infection is a drain on vitality and should be taken care of immediately. You can't afford to disregard an infection of the teeth, tonsils, adenoids, or a common cold.

Dr. Nash is a strong advocate of the work-rest rhythm for keeping vitality at par. He doesn't mean rest in the sense of doing nothing. You may get more rest out of some active exercise. In the rest period which follows, your body throws off the fatigue poisons and you enjoy a healthy let-down. Your nerves and muscles loosen up naturally.

Sleep is the most perfect form of rest and you need more of it in wartime. You should have eight hours' sleep every night and occasionally nine hours." If you catch a cold, feel one coming on, or, are just getting over one, you should have an extra hour of sleep every night for a week.

Good posture also figures in vitality. You save yourself by learning to work in the most efficient sitting or standing posture. Sit with the back of hips against the back of the chair, spine straight and do your forward bending at the hip joints. In standing, "stand tall' but relaxed. You can rest yourself now and then by standing pigeon-toed, weight on outer borders of the feet.

Your food habits add to or subtract from your vitality. Dr. Nash particularly favors the consumption of food as nearly as possible in the condition in which it was grown. Eat plenty of the protective green and yellow vegetables and do not ruin their value by over-cooking, cooking in too much water, or adding soda. Make good use of the 100 per cent whole grain breads and cereals, and drink your pint of milk a day.

As a final bit of advice, he says to "get some good, old-fashioned joy and happiness out of living."

ARMY NURSES SPROUT WINGS

By Margaret Kernodle

Associated Press Feature Writer

Bowman Field, Ky.—Lieut. Leora Stroup is the first woman to teach other American women "air evacuation" nursing for overseas duty.

She'd rather be in this job than any other in this country for two reasons: First, she is a pilot, with 400 hours of flying. Even though her job (as assistant to Maj. Claude B. White, plans and training officer of the first School for Air Evacuation Nurses in this country) keeps her too busy to pilot a plane now, she's close to aviation here and gets some flying even if she doesn't sit at the controls. Second, she's an education expert, has been an Army nurse only since last October.

The big idea she must get across to the students here is a new one for nurses: To act as the doctor for just about everything but operations when flying from a battlefield with wounded fighters.

Flight Nurse Tactics

The flight nurse—that's the name she gets when she graduates from this school—may give trahsfusions and even prescribe certain medicine as well as dose it to the patient.

The school day is 8 to 4:30 except Saturday (off at noon). Sundays, Lieutenant Stroup says, is the day the nurses wash their shirts.

Lieutenant Stroup not only teaches the flight nurses, she also disciplines them in a military-minded manner. She sees that the overseas caps are straight on the students' heads, asks them to tone down the rouge and lipstick. She persuades the major to give them a morning off to get their hair done once a month.

They Must Salute

She calls the nurse down who wears light blue socks to match her Air Forces shirt, but she laughs when she tells the tale. "That girl," she grins, "just had to put her little personality in."

Lieutenant Stroup admits she had quite a time keeping them from wearing jewelry, and her account of how the students learned to salute might rate a Broadway or Hollywood laugh: It seems some of them couldn't stage a salute without an oomph wiggle or almost a jitterbug act.

She admits several nurses skinned their knees climbing into the troop carrier command planes the first time or two.

The flight nurses "Yes, Mam," her, but occasionally "Sir" comes her way because most of the teachers are men.

Lieutenant Stroup's sense of humor sprays a smile all over her face. She winks now and then but not while saluting. Blue-eyed and with hair almost jet black, she's no school marm type.

She was a 99-er while in active flying, used to beat it to the air races in her native town of Cleveland whenever she was working out of town. She's a charter member of the civilian Aerial Nurse Corps, belong to Wayne University faculty, was state coordinator of a special nursing program in Ohio, worked in vocational education in Michigan and started flying lessons in 1932.

A Donald Duck flower pot sprouts ivy and magenta ribbon in her barracks room. But she's proud of having led close order drill and wishes she could do so now. She's all for army discipline.

Like one of her students, Lieut. Phyllis Wiesner, of Beloit, Wis., she doesn't think of flight nurses as "aerial Florence Nightingales" so much as she thinks of them as "Americans with a job to do." She looks forward to the day when her orders send her to lead a group of nurses to a battlefield to bring back wounded.

Martha Ellyn's Platter Chatter

This has been a long, long week for many a cook. Many a woman has been pulling all kinds of tricks out of her kitchen bag, to know how to stretch her butter supply, or cook without it.

Martha Ellyn

But as long as there are eggs and calavos, a nutritious, delicious and attractive dish can be achieved. Baked Stuffed Calavos can be made without butter. So the following recipe may be the answer to some cooks to their no-meat, no-butter, problem.

BAKED STUFFED CALAVOS

If you want to make 4 servings, select 2 ripe but not too soft calavos. Cut calavos in half lengthwise, remove seed and scoop out pulp to make a nest for the filling. Cut a thin slice from the bottom of each calavo half before filling to give a "platform," or set calavo in muffin pans to keep upright while cooking. Dice the hollowed out pulp and combine with 2 hard cooked, coarsely chopped eggs. Combine 1-3 cup diced celery, 1-3 cup soft bread crumbs, ½ teaspoon grated lemon rind, ½ teaspoon salt, ⅛ teaspoon pepper, ⅛ teaspoon ginger and ¼ cup milk. Add this milk to the egg-pulp mixture. Taste, add more seasoning if necessary. Fill the calavo halves. Top with bread crumbs or corn flakes. Bake in moderately hot oven, 400 degrees, until top is brown—about 20 minutes. Serve at once. Yield: 4 servings.

Variation: Bottled horseradish, about ¼ teaspoon, and / or ⅛ teaspoon mustard may be added to the filling if desired.

News of the Women's Clubs

By Genevieve Reynolds

So you have a great desire to go to South America! Before you start southward, take a bit of advice from alert, progressive, Senorita Julia MacLean Vinas, learn Spanish.

GENEVIEVE REYNOLDS

This distinguished-looking Peruvian with large, expressive brown eyes and white hair is secretary to the assistant director to the Pan American Union. She came to the United States back in 1931 for a short visit and has remained here ever since, except for periodic returns to her native land. Her last trip home, she has recorded in a series of well written, vivid articles, "A Sentimental Journey to Peru," which have been published in four installments in the Pan American Bulletin.

"If you consider that the study of Spanish requires concentration and many days of effort," she said in an article now being published by the American Legion Auxiliary's magazine, "you will agree with me that the plane, which today covers the distance to Lima in two days, has exploded the fiction of those courses of 'Spanish in 20 Easy Lessons,' which passengers used to study during the long sea voyage."

"You, who have had more experience than we, not because you are older, but perhaps because you are more precocious and have rightfully obtained all that you possess, help us to solve our problems," she wrote.

"Promote programs of cultural interchange so that our women may have the privilege of coming here to observe at first hand all that is notable in North American life—not your material comforts, but your civic spirit, the civil liberty that you enjoy, your capacity for work, your protective laws for women and children, your cultural and social welfare institutions—which is the basis of your greatness."

So eager is hospitable, friendly Julia for the peoples of North and South America to understand each other that upon her recent visit to her home, she immediately began teaching a summer course in English at San Marcos University—the oldest on the continent. Here she teaches Spanish to the North Americans.

That isn't all. The versatile Julia, who writes with fluency, accuracy and picture making words, is doing a series of juvenile stories in Spanish, which brings the children of the two continents closer together. Already, she has made a name for herself in the writing field, both in the United States and South America. Since coming here she has been the special correspondent for El Commercio, a big daily in Lima—the oldest in the country, which was founded in 1839.

Intensely interested in the women's problems of her country, she feels that she can fight better for them here than if she were in Peru.

Speaking before the American Legion Auxiliary recently—she was designated to do so by His Excellency, the Ambassador of Peru, Don Manuel de Freyre y Santander, she explained that today the women of her country are making steady and rapid progress.

"Now they have the opportunity to obtain a well-rounded and advanced instruction in harmony with the need of the times," she asserted. "They have assumed responsibility for their acts and have succeeded in convincing their families that work is ennobling and thus have overcome family opposition to work outside the home. They have obtained the right to vote in municipal elections; they ask that freedom of action for women be recognized and respected on the same basis as for men, not only in theory but in practice; and when they feel themselves fully prepared they will demand political rights. In the endeavor to gain a daily livelihood new horizons have been opened to them, and little by little as they assume greater obligations they are becoming increasingly conscious of their rights."

A voracious reader, an excellent pianist and a good singer, Julia always can be found at the Pan-American concerts. Vitally interested in social welfare projects, she probably knows more than most Washingtonians about those in the District, which she frequents.

An aristocrat—in thoughts as well as birth—Senorita MacLean, is cognizant of the problems of the underprivileged. She works untiringly for those in need.

Incidentally, if she didn't use her mother's name—Vinas—she always would be mistaken for a North American. Her great-grandfather, Alexander MacLean, was one among the first group of Scotchmen to settle in Peru. After establishing a lucrative merchantile business he married a Peruvian belle, in Lima. Julia's father was educated at Eton, England, but he too returned to Peru and married one of the Peruvian beauties, Senorita Vinas. However, Julia was educated at the fashionable Convent of Sacred Heart in Lima and at San Marcos University.

Ever ready to promote understanding and Pan-American relations to the nth degree, she was appointed by her government official delegate to the Seventh Child Conference held in Mexico City in 1935. And when the Eighth Child Conference was held in Washington in 1942, again she was Peru's delegate. Also, went to Lima in 1938 as a member of the Peruvian Eighth Secretariat, Pan American Conference. "There was born the famous declaration of Lima," which binds together all the countries of the South American continent to the United States more than any previous conference.

She is a member of the Professional Writers' Club of Washington.

Your Baby and Mine

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

The child who has been a chronic feeding problem from birth leads one to suspect that some personal sensitivity toward food is at the root of the appetitelessness.

Just in last week's mail were three letters so similar as to appear to have been written by the same mother. They had to do with children from 10 months to 2 years, all of whom had been difficut to feed from the day they were born. Each child had been so "set" against eating that he or she had had to be hospitalized.

Always, so the tales ran, the mother spent hours getting the child to accept an ounce or two of milk. Each problem improved as the child grew old enough for solid foods. In fact, the evidence of apparent health in all of them would imply that, despite their aversion to food, all of them were getting along fairly well.

None of these children had become "ravenous eaters" and all of them spent long periods at the table. And, or so it seemed to me, the basis of their aversion was milk. One mother admitted that it took her hours to get the child to drink two ounces of milk. Yet, despite this obvious dislike, she continued to spend the two hours.

I do not pretend to draw any hard and fast conclusions from these three cases, but it would seem at least desirable to see what results could be had from omitting milk for a time. At least one might make very marked changes in the form of the milk being served.

If a fresh milk is being used, change to one of the processed milks. If this does not show an improvement, then try goat's milk; and if the condition remains the same, then try some food whose basis is soybeans. Act upon the conclusion that there must be something in the food offered so personally distasteful or offending to the small individual he would jeopardize his very existence rather than accept it.

A general discussion of food sensitivities appears in the leaflet, "What Mothers Should Know About Eczema." It may be had by sending a 3-cent-stamped, self-addressed envelope with your request to Myrtle Meyer Eldred, in care of this newspaper.

Sedimentation Rate of Blood May Prove Useful to Doctors

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

A correspondent writes to ask what value the laboratory test called the blood sedimentation rate has.

If I had a gift for fiction, I would write a short story to be called "The Man Who Ruined Hadleyville." In this story a doctor invents an instrument called the esthesiometer, which measures pain. He goes around his little village sticking it under people's tongues and finds that the life-long whiner hasn't any pain at all, while the poor widow who has been supporting her children by taking in washings registers 100 per cent pain all the time. The revelations of the esthesiometer in my story break up families and ruin the social structure, so probably it is just as well that no such instrument is invented.

The physician, however, would like a reliable means of separating patients who are simply functionally sick and those who have tissue destruction or infection. The thermometer, the pulse rate and the respiratory rate are good rough indices of this kind and a valuable addition is the blood sedimentation rate.

How Test Is Made

The test is very simply performed: a small amount of blood is put in a sodium citrate solution and left in a tube, upright, at room temperature for an hour. The blood cells settle to the bottoom at a certain rate which can be charted. Apparently in conditions where there is tissue destruction or infection, the blood cells are heavier and they fall to the bottom of the tube at a more rapid rate.

By and large it is a very reliable and valuable test. It does not make a diagnosis of any specific condition, but simply separates the sheep from the goats—the people who are really sick and the ones who are just complaining.

The Gentler Sex

The 'Middle-West' Passes

By Malvina Lindsay

THE TRAIN is rushing westward across the flat country of Southern Indiana and Illinois. It is September, 1938—those fateful days just before Munich. The Pullman is almost empty—even the coaches have rows of empty seats. I look out the window at the peaceful countryside, my mind possessed by what I have left behind . . . the ominous black headlines in the newspapers . . . the never ceasing voice of the radio . . . the constant question on every lip, "What will Hitler do?"

Can it be possible, I ask myself, that the deadly hand of war will reach out from Europe to these quiet, unsuspecting farm homes in this remote region, to these little towns with their Main streets full of parked motor cars, to these boys and girls happily waving at the train as it flies past the stations? It is very quiet in the Pullman. The few passengers read or look out the windows. They eagerly buy newspapers at every stop. Men go into the smoker, speculate with other men, come back to their seats and again look out the window.

But gradually as we go westward the tension ceases. Long stretches of plains and woodland flit past. Further and further recede Washington—the East—Europe. Well perhaps I am too jittery about this thing. Perhaps I have been seeing it too closely in the East. After all this country is so big, so self-sufficient, so far away. I begin to feel more relaxed—safer.

The Union Station at St. Louis is under the spell of a hot lazy afternoon. Here is space, quiet, and a leisurely coming and going of passengers. I buy newspapers, eagerly scan the front pages. Headlines of Europe compete for space with what the town fathers are doing. They seem less black, less menacing. . . . I start westward across Missouri. Further and further the East recedes.

THE SAME TRAIN is rushing westward across Southern Indiana and Illinois. It is March, 1943, four and a half years after Munich. The Pullman is filled even to the upper berths. Young officers in well tailored uniforms move effortlessly across the swaying aisles where formerly occasional business magnates ambled. Their shiny new baggage is parked beside their seats. They are off to the wars. A few on furlough are accompanied by their brides, lithe, flowing haired schoolgirls. An elderly business man rides backward, wonders how he will ever get into an "upper." He hasn't been in one for 30 years. Everyone speculates on the chances of getting into the diner, tells how long the train looks as it rounds a curve, wonders about meat rationing gasoline . . . Washington . . . Europe . . . Russia . . . China . . . North Africa, the South Pacific. Passengers talk readily, about little things, big things, everything. No one reads a book, few look at magazines. All through the long train, the coaches filled with soldiers, sailors, relieves of servicemen, babies going to see their soldier daddies, there is talk, bustle, confusion.

I look out the window at the same countryside I saw in 1938. Men are plowing in the fields, but the roads are quiet and lonely. No shining motor cars glide along the highways, few are parked in the main streets of the little towns. Only children wave at the train at stations. The ramshackle little houses close to the railroad on the outskirts of towns and villages flaunt their service flags and Red Cross emblems.

The train pulls into the Union Station in St. Louis. Crowds are arriving, departing. The place is full of soldiers coming, going, sitting on benches. Everywhere people, crowds, bustle. I buy newspapers. The headlines are screaming the news from Tunisia, Russia, London, Australia, Washington. City fathers and their doings are on the inside pages.

I take a train westward. It is a coach and I am glad to get that. I board it 45 minutes ahead of time to get a seat. Soon passengers are standing in the aisles, sitting on suitcases. The crowd is a varied assortment. Beside me is a Chicago manufacturer now on a mission for the Government. He is accustomed to traveling in planes. There are soldiers, white and colored, and soldiers' mothers, wives, babies, and sweethearts. Some of the young brides and farm mothers have never been on a train before.

Persons of all types and backgrounds, from all parts of the country are jammed against each other. Many are tired, irritated, confused. Some soldiers in high spirits near the front have a bottle. White and Negro soldiers stand in the aisles. A few former Pullman passengers look disdainfully at the throng. A fine set-up for trouble, I think to myself.

A peaked young girl in a fussy blue dress and a pink hat stands in the aisle holding a baby. The soldier with the bottle sees her, rises and magnificently invites her to come forward and take his seat. She accepts and he and his companions seek to entertain the pinched little baby. Everyone smiles sympathetically. A well dressed woman tells a Negro soldier to put the heavy overcoat he is holding in the aisle on top of her suitcase in the rack above. He smiles gratefully. "Here, I'll help you lad," volunteers the Chicago manufacturer. Another woman offers a soldier her suitcase to sit on. A large, tired, elderly farm woman is given a seat by a serviceman and proceeds to tell him about her soldier son. Everyone feels more relaxed, more expansive. Everyone talks. Passengers climbing past the soldiers in the aisle beg their pardon. At each stop as passengers push their way to the door past the throngs of servicemen in the vestibule, they say "Well boys maybe you'll get a seat now" or "Goodby and good luck."

The train goes further across Missouri. I look out the window at the rolling hills and meadows flying past. But the East does not recede. This is not the Middle West. This is America.

Typical American Housewife to Be Liaison Between Home and OPA

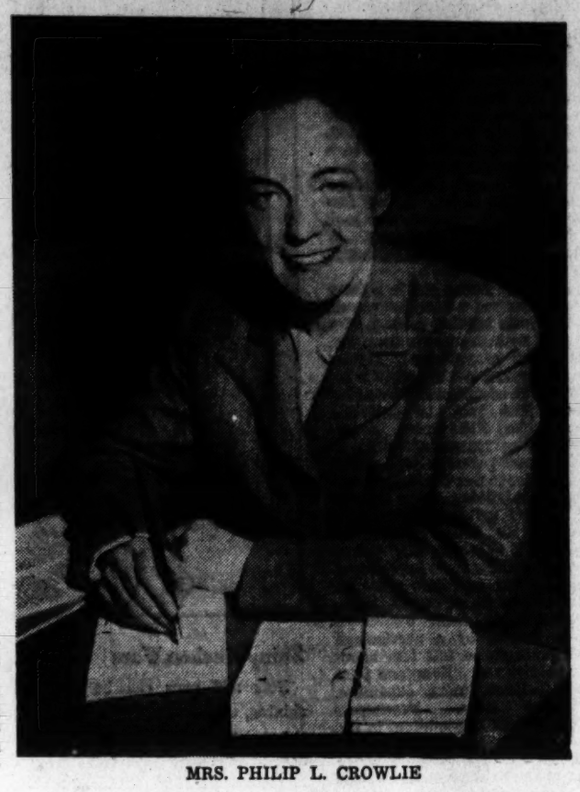
Mrs. L. B. Crowlie Has Had 20 Years Training for Job

By Martha Rhyne

To Washington, where all things are represented in one capacity or another, comes Leone Bauer Crowlie, typical American housewife, who will give a housewife's point of view to the Office of Price Administration.

Her life story is not too different from that of any American homemaker. She was born on a ranch in South Dakota, attended public school at nearby Gettysburg, was graduated from Eastern Normal and Madison College and began teaching in rural schools. Twenty years ago she married Phillip L. Crowlie, business mangaer of a clinic in not-so-large Huron, S. Dak.

At the request of Prentiss Brown, OPA Director, Mrs. Crowlie has come to Washington to give OPA lawyers and economic theorists a housewife's viewpoint on price control and rationing regulations. From the time of initiation of plans for new regulations until the beginning of their administration in every part of the Nation, Mrs. Crowlie will follow through with a practical point of view, trying to persuade lawyers and administrators to phrase their rules in plain language that the housewife may understand.



MRS. PHILIP L. CROWLIE

American Wives Learn The Hard Way

Said Mrs. Crowlie: "If we were all home economists we could easily cope with rationing problems. But the greater part of America's numerous housewives learned the hard way, by experience. Facing the double mathematical problem of cost figured in points and dollars is not an easy task."

Asked how she qualified for her selection as America's "typical housewife," she answered that OPA searched for a practical housewife with enough professional experience to meet and make effective appeals to the public. She was recommended for her job by a national organization.

After 20 years of keeping house, Mrs. Crowlie finds life difficult in a hotel room, where she can't brew that early morning cup of coffee when she wants it. She's among those more than a thousand hopefuls who are "looking for an apartment." Despite this, she thinks that conditions in Washington are grossly exaggerated. "A little patience goes a long way and only a few minutes of waiting will usually get you what you want," she said. She loves Washington because so much happens here.

Does Not Come Here as Reformer

Questioned as to whether she had any quarrel with OPA regulations before she came to Washington in an official capacity, Mrs. Crowlie quickly replied that as a housewife on "active duty" two months ago rationing was not then so difficult. She hastened to add that she did not come here as a reformer.

Letters from housewives, already crossing her desk by the hundreds, do not grumble or complain as a rule. They seek understanding. And that's just what Mrs. Crowlie is here for though she discloses no definite plans that OPA might have for her other than to say that she will make visits to homemakers in various sections of the country so as not to lose the "housewifely touch." She is a strong advocate of putting capable, responsible, understanding women on local rationing boards and was glad to see the new trend started here in the District.

Three children has this small, slender woman, who, despite her title of special assistant to the deputy administrator and four weeks' experience in harassed OPA, manages to remain quite human and good-natured. Mary Jane, 12, is in boarding school; John, 16, is a junior in high school and can't wait for vacation on the ranch; Roderick, 18, is a private in the Armored Division at Fort Knox, having entered last fall.

Before the war she loved to read, swim and play golf; cooking was her favorite pastime, with homemade breads a specialty. For office work, she wears simple, becoming clothing, low-heeled brown oxfords (the kind for which Stamp No. 17 should be expended). As yet, she uses the drawers of her desk for keeping papers and has no elaborate filing system.

Like Typical Housewife Loves Organizations

Typical housewife that she is, she loves organizations, and just to prove it, she's been a member of the Office of Civilian Defense in her home town, chairman of a committee on the mobilization of womanpower for production and conservation of food, delegate to the 1940 Democratic Convention in Chicago, president of the birthday ball committee, member of the Episcopalian Ladies' Auxiliary and the Ladies' Auxiliary of the American Legion, the Parent-Teacher Association and the Federation of Women's Clubs.

Of her work she knows little thus far. It is still new to both her and her superiors. She believes that the all-important soldier on the home front, the American housewife, should take rationing and wartime regulations in a neighborly, cooperative spirit. Hers is a tough job and a thankless one. Somehow one can't help but hope upon meeting her that strenuous wartime Washington won't spoil her charm. But to her, 25 million housewives will look for guidance and for some light in the present terrific fog. Hers is a hard row to hoe.

Etiquette Rules Rations In London

By Dixie Tighe
International News Service Staff Writer

London, March 26.—Attention, American housewives:

Six months ago I came face to face with this thing called rationing. I hated it. It revealed me as a short-tempered creature in perpetual fury because I couldn't wink a butcher out of an extra chop or turn sprouts into mushrooms by a wave of the hand.

I'm still no gem of patience. But I've learned what the English discovered long ago: Rationing is what you make it and, besides being the best possible scheme for equal distribution of food, it has angles of friendliness and humor.

Housewives here by no means have learned to love rationing. It has practically no element of charm. But they have accepted it, not with dreary resignation, but with understanding—to which they have added culinary inventiveness.

Besides breeding humor and new menus, rationing over here has developed new etiquette.

Guests Bring Butter and Bacon

It is extremely bad form, for example, to accept a weekend invitation without bringing your principal rations, like butter and bacon.

Indeed, thousands of English people go around as if they were expecting to meet a horse—always ready with their lump of sugar in case they are asked to tea.

It is not true that rationing has broken down traditional English reserve. Bombs did not make the average home open house. In war or in peace, people in Britain are not given to borrowing a cup of sugar, and they do not care to have any forced on them.

There is not a great deal of pooling of food over here. To the English, pooling is an invasion of their privacy and a loss of independence.

During the blitz, there was a magnificent spirit of generosity. But the fact that a man gave you his shirt, his bed or his butter never was construed as an invitation to eternal intimacy.

However, once invited to an English house, extra rationed or unrationed contributions are as welcome as the guests.

A can of salted peanuts will take you further than a title, and two eggs can do more for a girl than dimples.

The truly perfect guest will remember to bring along a little something for the household pets. Rationing has been tough on the four-legged set, for it's against the law here to give animals any food fit for human consumption.

Queueing Is The Word for It

One hardship, which at the same time is one of the biggest jokes in the rationing system, is lining up for everything. The English call this "queueing." There are queues for everything—meat, fish, apples, cakes—and special queues for cat's meat and dog meat.

Faithful pet lovers wait hours to bring home fido's or kitty's rations.

Many contend that the English absolutely love queueing. There is a current story of the man who queued up for an hour, waiting for his bus. Finally boarding it, he rode for six blocks, saw another long queue, and jumped off to get on the end of the line simply because he couldn't resist it.

Then there was the elderly gentleman who queued up and eventually inquired: "What's this queue for?"

"Why, for childrens' diapers," a lady queuer told him.

"Splendid!" he exclaimed. "It makes a nice change from cigarettes."

Human nature being what it is, there is no denying that the housewife who manages to produce on a scarce ration is pretty pleased with herself. During the recent fish shortage, I was invite to Bebe Daniel's birthday party. Her husband, Maj. Ben Lyon, had sent her orchids. But it was not the orchids Bebe boasted about.

Englishman Never Apologizes

"Smell them," Bebe proudly ordered. The orchids, by nose told me, had been lying in the icebox next to a precious fish.

I believe the English have a good slant on rationing because they never apologize for it. It's amazing with what good grace they take any new form of rationing.

Recently, all out-of-town phone calls were restricted to six minutes. There was virtually no comment on the order. The restriction is even executed cheerily, the operator interrupting with :"Say goodbye now."

The American people should be proud of their boys over here who go in for voluntary rationing. If there is one thing an American soldier cannot bear to see, it is a child without candy. And that's where his ration goes.

At home, your rationing will have far more variety than over here. Even so, it probably will become monotonous.

But there is one thing that both our menus will have in common—they never will include a diet of humble pie.

Polish Military Attache Entertains Official Group

Gen. Emile Bethouart, Head of French Military Mission; Polish Ambassador Among Guests

Col. Wlodzimierz Onacewicz, Military Attache of the Polish Embassy, entertained at a cocktail party yesterday afternoon and will be host again today.

Yesterday Gen. Emile Bethouart, head of the French Military Mission from North Africa, was a guest and also in the group were the Polish Ambassador and Mme. Ciechanowska, the Minister-Counselor of the Polish Embassy and Mme. Kwapiszewska, Mme. Fotitch, wife of the Ambassador of Yugoslavia; the Greek Ambassador, Cimon Diamantopoulos, Representative Charles Dewey, the Military Attache of the British Embassy and Mme. Rex Benson, the Military Attache of the Norwegian Embassy, Col. Oscar Klingenberg, and a number of high ranking Army officiers from the American General Staff.

General Behtouart who is Gen. Henry Giraud's representative in this country, escaped execution by a few hours last November in North Africa and was saved only by the timely arrival of the American landing in French Morocco.

The general had ordered his division covering the shore north of Casablanca not to resist but to welcome the Americans as allies. For that he had been thrown in prison and his orders reversed by Gen. Charles Nogue, Governor General of Morocco.

As the court-martial debated with General Bethouart, the Americans fought their way inland from the beach. The sounds of the battle that tested their strength punctuated the arguments. If the Americans had really come in sufficient force to take North Africa the court-martial would be just a formality. But if the Americans were thrown back undoubtedly it would be expedient to sentence General Bethouart to death. The court-martial proceedings were purposely dragged out awaiting the outcome of the battle. After two days on a Wednesday morning at 9 o'clock, the court learned that an armistice had been signed two hours earlier and so proceedings were suspended to await further information. General Bethouart later learned that Gen. George Patton, commander of the American forces on his front had intervened.

Win the Peace Now Committee Meets At Pinchot Home

Mrs. Norman deR. Whitehouse of New York and Mrs. Reinhold Noyes of Philadelphia were special guests at the meeting yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock at the home of Mrs. Gifford Pinchot under the auspices of the Washington committee to "Win the Peace Now."

The "Win the Peace Now" resolution, sponsored by Senator Joseph Ball, Senator Harold Burton, Senator Carl Hatch and Senator Lister Hill, is a challenge to all who believe that the United States must share in building a world of peace and justice under law.

Mrs. Whitehouse is chairman of the newly organized Women's Action Committee for Victory and Lasting Peace, and Mrs. Noyes is vice chairman.

Mrs. Thomas Leiter In New York Hospital

Mrs. Thomas Leiter is in the Hospital of Special Surgery in New York, where she will spend several weeks owing to an accident to her foot. Mr. Leiter, now a private in the Army, is stationed in Wyoming. Mrs. Leiter is the former Miss Marion Oates, daughter of Mrs. Philip Gossler of New York.

Mrs. Gossler will make her professional debut as a composer on April 4 when the distinguished violinist, Robert Kitain presents two of her compositions at a Carnegie Hall concert. One of the numbers is an offertory hymn, "For Thy Gifts Untold."

Mr. and Mrs. Gossler will entertain at a large reception in honor of Mr. Kitain following the concert.

Junior League Officers Named At Meeting

At a recent meeting of the Junior League of Washington Mrs. Robert Whitelaw Wilson announced the results of the election of new league officers.

Mrs. Wilson continues in her second year as president of the local organization and the new officers will serve as members of her executive committee. They are as follows: Miss Virginia Maury Flannery, first vice president; Mrs. Kenneth Holland, second vice president; Mrs. Francis Almirall, secretary, and Mrs. William S. Anderson, treasurer.

Other business matters discussed at the meeting held at the home of Mrs. Alanson B. Houghton included a report from Miss Elma O. Phillipson, director of the social service department at Children's Hospital, a department maintained by the Junior League of Washington.

Letitia Hughson, Crosby S. Noyes Wed in Florida

Of interest to Washington is the recent marriage of Miss Letitia Augusta Hughson, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Walter Hughson of Chestnut Hill, Pa., to Lieut. Crosby Stuart Noyes, United States Army Air Forces, son of Mrs. Thomas A. Stone of Ottawa and the late Newbold Noyes of Washington.

The wedding tok place in Mariana, Fla. The bride was given in marriage by her father and had as her only attendant, her sister, Miss Marjorie Hughsoon. Lieut. Edward Lyman served as best man.

The bridegroom is the grandson of Frank Brett Noyes of Washington, former president of the Associated Press.

Chilean General Leaves for Home

The Chilean Ambassador, Rodolfo Michels, returned to Washington yesterday from New York, where he made a speech at the luncheon in his honor given by the Latin-American section of the Board of Trade.

The Ambassador said farewell yesterday to Gen. Oscar Escudero, Commander in Chief of the Chilean Army, who left by plane to return to Chile.

Dinner Honors Noted Chileans At Mayflower

Dr. Eduardo Cruz-Coke, member of the Senate of the Republic of Chile and former Minister of Health; Maj. Gen. Arturo Espinosa Mujico, member of the Inter-American Defense Board and chairman of the Chilean group, and Mario Rodrigues, First Secretary of the Chilean Embassy, were guests at dinner yesterday at the Mayflower of Charles J. Brand.

Dr. Cruz-Coke, whose very short presence in Washington was the occasion for the gathering, is one of Chile's outstanding public men. Not only is he a Senator and former cabinet minister but he is an authority on physiological chemistry, and one of the outstanding physicians of his home city of Santiago, the national capital. He has been counselor of the Bank of Compulsory Insurance, one of the earliest of the social security agencies in the world, and he has also served as President of the National Dietary Council, as well as representing his country at various foreign conferences.

Maj. Gen. Oscar Escudero, Chief of Staff of the Chilean Army, who is also in Washington for a few days, was unable to attend at the last moment. Among the guests were Mr. Cloyd Heck Marvin, Dr. Tomas Cajigas, Dr. Charles L. Parsons, Dr. Luther Reichelderfer, Dr. Walter A. Bloedorn, Dr. William Earl Clark, Walter J. Murphy, Joshua Evans, jr., Frederic P. Lee, Prof. R. H. Lush, Robert H. Engle, F. S. Lodge, and J. W. Wizeman.

Miss Wann Named To College Board

Miss Jerine Wann, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John L. Wann, has been appointed to the committee on national rumors of the rumor clinic at Stephens College. The clinic is a project of the war-peace organization which supervises all war activities on the campus.

Student committees, working through the residence halls, keep tab on current rumors, sort them as to whether they are campus-wide, national or international in scope and refer them to another student committee, according to subject matter. Refutation, confirmation and details on the data collected are published in Stephens Life, the student newspaper, and broadcast weekly over KTX, the college radio station.

Capital Housing Problem Subject Of Benefit Show

Special Dispatch to The Post

New York, March 26.—The spring theater benefit for the Children's Village will be the second night performance of "Dancing in the Streets," at the Imperial Theater Thursday, April 8. This musical comedy now in production, deals with the lighter side of the housing problem in Washington today.

The proceeds of the benefit will be devoted to the scholarship fund of the Children's Village at Dobbs Ferry, which is a home and training school for underprivileged boys, 300 of whom, ranging in age from 10 to 17 years, are under care there today. The boys live in family-like groups in modern cottage homes, under the sympathetic supervision of cottage-parents. A program of schoolwork, physical training and athletic play is worked out for each individual boy by a psychiatric clinic. Schooling for the older boys includes vocational training. In eight industrial shop buildings are taught the fundamentals of the printing, painting, plumbing, woodworking, auto mechanics, electricity, carpentry and masonry trades.

A junior chapter of the R. O. T. C. provides military training for the older boys. Today's curriculum includes some war activity for everybody, whether it be serving as air-raid warden, collecting scrap metal, or even, for some of the smaller youngsters, knitting gay squares to make blanketes for convalescent soldiers.

The Children's Village is 92 years old and has provided home life and guidance toward useful living for more than 50,000 children. Mrs. H. Lawrence Bogert, jr., is general chairman of the benefit.

Overseas Service Wanted by WAVES

Cleveland, March 26 (AP).—A great majority of the girls now in service with the Navy would like to have permission to serve overseas, Lieut. Comdr. Mildred McAfee, national director of the WAVES, said today at a press conference.

Miss McAfee, visiting Cleveland to participate in a recruiting rally, told reporters that Congress now is considering legislation to make possible foreign service for the women of the Navy.

"These girls have signed up to serve their country and to be of some use to the war effort," she said. "They feel that if that service could be increased by being assigned to actual duty on ships and in foreign ports, that is what they want."

Miss Muna Lee Addresses Club

A dual personality, as Senora Luis Munoz Marin, she is the wife of the president of the Senate of Puerto Rico, as Miss Muna Lee, she is assistant director of the division of cultural relations of the Department of State. This hard-working good neighbor is well known to the literary world for her writing achievements, of both poetry and prose. On the technical side, she is a competent geographer and translator of Spanish-American anthology.

Now, as during the past months, Miss Lee is busy talking on her favorite subject—Pan-Americanism. Last evening she addressed the Woman's Auxiliary of St. George's Church in Arlington, Va., on the subject of Puerto Rico, and on April 7 she will be a speaker at a meeting of the Puerto Rican American Women's League at the Wardman Park Hotel.

College Student Discusses India

Miss Ruth Helen Borgstrom, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Parry Borgstrom, participated in the student panel discussion of some of the important aspects of the Indian independence problem held at Stephens College for Women, Columbia, Mo., recently.

Miss Borgstrom and several other internationally minded students have made a project of studying the culture, language and customs of one or more foreign countries. The purpose of this new extracurricular activity is a better understanding of the countries with which the United States will be having commercial and social relations following the war.

Lieut. Sheard To Take Bride This Afternoon

At a ceremony this afternoon in St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York City, Miss Elizabeth Joan O'Brien, of Freeport, N. Y., and Lieut. Alec Michael Sheard, jr., U. S. N. R. will be married. The Rev F. A. Graham will officiate at 4 p. m.

The bride, who is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Holwell O'Brien, will be given in marriage by her father. She will wear a Victorian gown of cloud white silk with a court train, and a pompadour ruffled cap will hold in place her shoulder-length veil. A corsage of white roses and bouvardia will complete her ensemble.

Miss Nancy Morris, the maid of honor, will be gowned in blue marquisette and will carry an old-fashioned bouquet of pink roses. Maj. Alec Michael Sheard, father of the bridegroom, will be best man. A reception at the Hotel Warwick will follow the ceremony.

Miss O'Brien attended St. Lawrence University and was graduated in the advanced class of 1943. The bridegroom, son of Maj. and Mrs. Alec Michael Sheard of New York City and Washington, attended Horace Mann School and New York University.

Men Try Skirts To Shame Coeds; Stunt Backfires

Chicago, March 26 (AP).—Male students at North Park College decided upon drastic action to try to shame coeds, wearing overall slacks and mannish shirts, back to wearing old-fashioned feminine clothing. The stunt, however, backfired.

The men students arrived for classes yesterday attired in skirts, but the coeds, instead of being irate, welcomed the protesting skirt brigade with everything from a giggle to a roar.

To top off the day, the girls not only continued to wear their slacks but pulled out their shirttails and let them fly defiantly in the breeze.

MILLINERY SALON, THIRD FLOOR

Congressional "Freshman" Wives Arrive

In the Capital Spotlight

"There Is a Tavern In the Town"

Wives of Newly Elected Senators Set Up Households in Capital

Among Newcomers on the Scene Are Those From N. J., Colo., Mich., Nebr., and Del.

By Peggy Preston

Each election brings new personalities and faces to the Capital, the freshmen members of Congress and their wives and families.

This year, however, while the politicos themselves have been on hand since the first of the year, their families have been tardy in arriving, due mainly to the city's famous housing problem. But at least five new Senate wives have braved the rigors of a wartime Capital and have entered into the scheme of things with enthusiasm.

In town since January 1, and enrolled in such requisite organizations as the Congressional Club and the Senate Ladies Club, are Mrs. C. Douglas Buck of Delaware, Mrs. Homer Ferguson of Michigan, Mrs. Albert W. Hawkes of New Jersey, Mrs. Kenneth S. Wherry of Nebraska and Mrs. Eugene D. Millikin of Colorado.

The last named is not quite to be classed as a newcomer. She has the distinction of having married two United States Senators. In 1932 she was in Washington for three months as the wife of one of the last of the lame duck Senators, Karl Schuyler. Following his death in an automobile accident that summer she married her present husband, who was appointed last year to fill the unexpired term of Colorado's Alva Adams.

Last November Senator Millikin was elected to complete the two remaining years of the term and he and his wife have settled down in an apartment at 2101 Connecticut Avenue.

The Millikins live quietly here. A Vassar graduate, Mrs. Millikin is a member of the Washington Branch of the Vassar Alumnae Association, and does two days of Red Cross a week with the Senate Ladies. Whenever possible she makes flying visits to Denver and her family there.

In fact she will be off to that city next week to welcome a new grandchild. She regrets that she won't see her only son this time, he being absent on Army duty.

Millikins Are New To Public Life

Born in Illinois, Mrs. Millikin has spent most of her life in the Western State. Aside from her brief three months in the Capital in 1932, she has had little association with political life. Her present husband, a Denver attorney, is a complete newcomer to public office and "His appointment as Senator last year came as a bolt out of the blue," his wife said the other day. "But it is an experience we have both been proud to know."

Senator and Mrs. Buck of Delaware arrived in Washington early in January and are living at the Shoreham.

The mother of four children, Mrs. Buck finds frequent weekend jaunts to Wilmington a pleasant necessity. Two of her offspring are married, but another two are still in college and for the time being she has no plans to bring them to Washington.

"I'll wait until summer vacation and figure it out then," she says. "For I'm sure I have no idea where to start looking for a house."

As the former Alice du Pont, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Coleman du Pont, Mrs. Buck qualifies as a native of Wilmington, although she was born in Kentucky.

"I haven't been back home yet, but I don't know how much longer I can stay away."

Fergusons Live At Methodist Building

Mrs. Homer Ferguson, wife of Michigan's new Senator, loves Washington, but her only child and two grandchildren in Detroit are vying strongly for her favor.

Interested in all matters of public interest, she spends her spare time in the Congressional Library and takes research notes for her busy husband. They consider themselves fortunate in having found living quarters within 2½ minutes traveling time from the Capitol.

In their apartment at the Methodist Building, 110 Maryland Avenue, they have the transportation problem licked and thus far have been too busy to venture much farther from the Senator's office at the Capitol.

Before coming to Washington, Senator Ferguson was a circuit court judge in Detroit and was in the spotlight for a time with his special investigation of graft in the city police department.

Already known to many Washingtonians is the attractive wife of Senator Kenneth S. Wherry of Nebraska.

"I came to Washington thinking I knew no one," she said recently, "and to my surprise I find old friends all over town."

The Wherrys are residents of Pawnee City, Nebr., and both attended the State University. Their two children have remained at home this winter to continue their high school classes, but they will be here early in June.

Senator Wherry is looking forward to a trip home in May to speak at the graduation exercises at Pawnee City High School, when his 17-year-old daughter will receive her diploma.

"We'll bring both the children back with us and pray that we'll find a house big enough to accommodate us all," their mother explained.

All Agree to Stay Through Summer

Political life is altogether new to Senator and Mrs. Albert W. Hawkes of New Jersey.

"He never served his political apprenticeship," the Senator's wife explained the other day. "But so many of the new Senators seem to be in the same boat that we feel quite at home here after all."

As president of the United States Chamber of Commerce the former Montclair businessman has spent considerable time in Washington, but his wife is making her first prolonged stay here . . . and liking it very much indeed.

Comfortably at home in a Mayflower apartment, they try to get back to Montclair for weekends now and then. They have two children, a daughter, married and living in California, and a son, Maj. A. Whitfield Hawkes, now serving with the Army Medical Corps.

All of the newcomers stoutly maintain they'll remain in the city throughout the summer months. They're taking their husbands' jobs seriously and not one plans to go home while Congress is in session.

'Gadsby's' Is Again 'Spot' For Officers

He wears a pair of silver wings, or maybe an Engineer castle or a Marine Corps insignia. And Thursday night he and several hundred other young officers made merry at historic Gadsby's Tavern in Alexandria, which has been a favorite haunt of officers since the days of George Washington and America's first major war.

Fired by the example set in other communities, a group of Alexandrians realized that here, too, as in other cities, the enlisted men were well taken care of by various organizations, but the young officers often had a lonesome time of it.

So, led by Mrs. Llewellyn Powell, they started an Officers' Club in Alexandria. Not yet is it organized on a large enough scale to provide daily recreation for officers, but they started by reserving Gadsby's Tavern for every other Thursday night for dances.

Then each member of the committee listed the names of young officers she knew, to whom were dispatched invitations for the first dance with a notation to bring other fellow officers with him. Each new officer who came to the dance was sent an invitation to the next one with a welcome for any of his pals.

As a result, though this was only the eighth dance in the program, the list already numbers over a thousand officers who come from Fort Belvoir, Bolling Field, and as far off as Fort Meade, Md., and Quantico.

Thursday night was settled on by a trial and error system, and has proven to be the most popular time of the week. The committee found that the officers either had weekend leaves to go home, or that practically all parties given were on Fridays or Saturdays, so that Thursday became "the day."

Informality is the rule, and the gay Paul Joneses and ice-breaker dances develop good-fellowship early in the evening. Another little item greatly appreciated is that there are always enough girls to go around as partners, and a few more.

During one of the "Reverse-cut-in" dances recently, a blushing young officer found himself awfully popular in the girls' stag line, and after being whirled off by a number of different partners in one dance, grinned happily and said "Gee, this is the first time this ever happened to me."

The idea has proven so popular with the feminine set in Alexandria that there is already a long waiting list of girls ready to sign up for the dances. Assisting Mrs. Powell in organizing the club are Mrs. Horace B. Cook, Miss Loretto Galvin, Mrs. Bayol Carlin, Mrs. J. Cameron Wemyss and Miss Ruth Bradley.

Entertain House Guest

Mr. and Mrs. Willard Barber of Woodside Forest, Md., have as their house guest, Edward Anderson of Jacksonville, Fla., of the Foreign Service, Department of State, for three weeks.

Mary Winslow To Attend N. Y. Conference

Miss Mary Winslow of the Inter-American Commission of Women will go to New York for the conference of women's organizations to be held on April 14, which is Pan-American Day.

The meeting is sponsored by the New York Times in collaboration with the National Council of Women and the Pan-American Women's Association. Purpose of the conference is to strengthen and vitalize the aims of the women in this hemisphere in the postwar period.

Carlos Davila, former President of Chile and onetime Ambassador to the United States, who now makes his home in New York, will deliver the keynote address. Miss Winslow, as the United States delegate, will welcome the conferees.

Other speakers from Washington will be Senora Carmen de Lozada, Bolivian member of the Inter-American Commission of Women; Senora Maria Rosa Oliver of the Office of Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs, Miss Blair Niles, Miss Muna Lee of the Department of State, and Senorita Minerva Bernardino, vice chairman of the Inter-American Commission of Women.

Mrs. John Hildt In New York For Wedding

Mrs. John Hildt is in New York, where she will be an attendant at the wedding of Miss Louise Culver Williams, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Rodney W. Williams of New York and New Marlboro, Mass., and Lieut. Charles Robert Devine, U. S. A., which will take place today in the Church of the Heavenly Rest. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. James J. Devine of Pelham Manor, N. Y.

Mrs. Hildt entertained at luncheon on Wednesday in honor of Miss Williams and her other bridal attendants. In the company were Mrs. Williams, mother of the bride-to-be; Mrs. Bradley Delehanty, Mrs. Haven Roberts, Mrs. J. Geer Wilcox, Mrs. Franklin M. Brown and Miss Rosette A. King.

Clayton W. Coopers At Home in N. Y.

Sergt. and Mrs. Clayton Wilford Cooper are now making their home on Long Island after their recent marriage.

The bride is the former Miss Marion Iva Sutcliffe, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Legrand Sutcliffe of Long Island, and Sergeant Cooper is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey W. Cooper of Washington. Their wedding took place in the Little Church Around the Corner in New York on March 18, with the Rev. Charles A. Weatherby officiating in the 5:30 o'clock ceremony.

Roy Burkart, an uncle of the bride, gave her in marriage. Miss Aline J. Kahn of Memphis was maid of honor and Sergt. Sidney Mann, U. S. A., was the best man.

Norway Nation To Be Honored at Luncheon Today

With Norway the Nation being honored today, Crown Prince Olaf of Norway will be guest speaker at the final luncheon meeting for the season of the United Nations Club. The event will take place at Hotel 2400.

Crown Princess Martha will be official hostess for the occasion, and Miss Meredith Howard, president of the club, will preside and introduce the speaker for the broadcast. A number of notables will be seated at the head table.

Rene Clair's motion picture, "A Nous La Liberte," will be presented tomorrow evening at Hotel 2400 by the United Nations Club, according to an announcement by Mrs. Roger S. Firestone, in the absence from the city of Mrs. Harold J. Coolidge, chairman for this phase of activity for the club. The picture will begin at 7:15 p. m.

Alumnae Group Selects New Head

Mrs. Ormand Elsmere Demorest of Sligo Park Hills, Md., has been elected president of the Washington Alumnae Association of Alpha Delta Pi Sorority.

Other members of the executive board chosen for the ensuing year include Miss Wanda Sarnecki, vice president; Miss Jessie Gardner, recording secretary; Miss Ruth Meehan, corresponding secretary; Miss Marian Kiker, treasurer; Mrs. James B. Kirkland, Pan-Hellenic delegate; Mrs. Willard La Rosa, alternate Pan-Hellenic delegate; Mrs. Robert A. Patton, program chairman, and Miss Janice Hale, correspondent for the Adelphean, the sorority's quarterly magazine.

Miss Hollister, Lieut. Hayden To Be Married

MISS ELIZABETH HILLMAN HOLLISTER

The Rev. Dr. J. Hillman Hollister, pastor of the Chevy Chase Presbyterian Church, and Mrs. Hollister announce the engagement of their daughter, Elizabeth Hillman, to Lieut. Buford Marine Hayden jr., U. S. N. R.

His parents are Mr. and Mrs. B. M. Hayden of Hutchinson, Kans.

The bride-elect, who is at home on vacation this weekend, will be graduated this May from Mount Holyoke College.

Lieutenant Hayden was graduated from Dartmouth College in 1940 and from the Thayer School of Civil Engineering, Dartmouth, in 1941.

No date has been selected for the wedding.

Miss Baker To Be Wed Next Week

Miss Mavis Ann Baker has chosen the Memorial Chapel at Walter Reed as the scene of her wedding on Saturday, April 3, to Capt. Charles O. Patterson, United States Army, son of Mr. and Mrs. William F. Patterson of Fort Worth, Tex.

Chaplain Richard Braunstein will officiate at the 7 o'clock ceremony, which will be followed by a reception in the home of the bride. Corpl. Donald C. Baker, United States Army, of Camp Butner, N. C., will give his sister in marriage and Mrs. Baker will be her matron of honor. Lieut. Archibald M. Harrison will be the best man and the ushers will be Capt. Norman R. Seidle, jr., and Capt. Cameron F. Woods.

Captain Patterson and his bride will have a wedding trip to New York after which they will return to Washington to make their home. Miss Baker, who is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Charles Baker of Wayne, Nebr., is a graduate of the Wayne State Teachers' College in Nebraska and is an employe of the Board of Economic Warfare. Her fiance is military personnel officer in the Office of the Provost Marshal General. Before entering the Army, he was a practicing attorney in Fort Worth and Austin, Tex. He is a graduate of Texas Christian University, the University of Texas and is a member of the Texas State Bar.

Spiritual Unity Needed, Says Mexican Envoy

Philadelphia, March 26.—Dr. Francisco Castillo Najera, Mexican Ambassador to the United States, said today it is now "more urgent than ever" that the two nations draw closer together.

"I am pleased to affirm," he said in a speech for a private preview of Mexican art at the Philadelphia Museum of Art, "that for several years a sympathetic understanding between Mexico and the United States has been rapidly growing and that Mexican music and painting, particularly, have been welcomed with true appreciation in the United States."

"Spiritual affinities," rather than "material interests and political contingencies," he said, "create and multiply the tie of solid and lasting friendship."

"If there is a meeting of the souls, if their aspirations coincide, understanding is succeeded by esteem and the latter is followed by human, fraternal love," he added. "This is a bond stronger than treaties and agreements; it is the supreme alliance, because it is consolidated by artistic communion; it is the spiritual pact that men seal with what is noblest and purest in them."

"The Pan-American spirit," he concluded, "growing ever stronger, strives to build a composite civilization in which the cultural elements both Anglo-Saxon and Latin-American, may combine without harming the ethnic and moral characteristics of either, that a family of nations, unified in its objectives of welfare and progress, be created.

"United, we will achieve the victory of our good cause and secure happiness in a free world."

Luncheon Given For Mrs. Forbes At Cathedral

Mrs. Allan Forbes of Boston, national chairman of the Women's Committees of Washington Cathedral, was the guest of honor at a luncheon yesterday, at the College of Preachers on the cathedral grounds. Mrs. Forbes, who heads the nation-wide women's organization that is raising funds for the building and maintenance of the cathedral, arrived yesterday from Boston to confer with cathedral authorities on plans for the coming year.

Attending the luncheon were the Rev. Charles W. F. Smith, Canon Chancellor of the Cathedral, and Mrs. Smith; the Rev. W. Curtis Draper, Acting Canon Precentor, and Mrs. Draper; A. G. Stoughton, executive secretary of the National Cathedral Association, and Mrs. Stoughton, and William R. Castle, a member of the Cathedral Chapter.

Indian Republics Subject of Talk

Lydia Van Hagan Van Zandt gave an illustrated talk on "The Indian Republics of South America" for her fellow members at a meeting of the Society of Woman Geographers at a tea at the home of Mrs. Gregg C. Birdsall.

Following a brief resume of the history of the people from the days of the Inca Empire to the present, Mrs. Van Zandt showed color moving pictures of the contemporary cosmopolitan life in Peru's capital, Lima, and then life among the agrarian Indians on the high sierras in Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador. These pictures were made by the speaker last year when she accompanied her husband, Dr. J. Parker Van Zandt, on an extended Government mission in South America.

The speaker concluded stressing the importance of the products of these countries in our war economy.

'The Hard Way' Turns Up A Few Unexpected Aces

Preview Screening Reveals Pleasant Surprises; Paul Muni to Head Cast of Memorial Pageant; Items of News and Gossip of the Theater

JOAN LESLIE

But there are a few aspects of this Lady Macbethan story of the theater that can do with a bit of dilly-dallying any time—the sooner the quicker, and possibly better.

For instance, while many will take for granted the splendid performance of the chilled-steel, elder sister portrayed by Ida Lupino in this charade, few among them will be able to recognize Joan Leslie as the same drab little girl who played the primitive hill-Wilhelmina opposite Gary Cooper in "Sergeant York." No wonder Fred Astaire thinks highly of her as a dancing partner in the business they have been making together on another lot!

Then there are Jack Carson and Dennis Morgan, two amiable and able young fellows, who have shown well on previous occasions, but never quite so handsomely as they do here. Off Mr. Carson's performance in "The Male Animal" alone, he could be given a high rating in any cast. As the small-time, vaudeville "Sophisticate," however, he gets a little something extra into the feeling and sincerity of his work in "The Hard Way."

And as for Mr. Morgan, he really goes to town as the philosophical "wolf" who turns out to be an eminently right guy. Furthermore, he finally sings and makes it all the more inexplicable that after having been signed to a contract on the strength of his voice in the first place, he so long should have been muted by the higher-ups. He has one of the pleasantest voices we've heard lately and being permitted to use it seems to have had a decidedly advantageous effect on his acting, too. Of course, he is cast in what amounts to an actor-proof role, but what of it? Maybe he just makes it seem that way.

Beyond that, deponent sayeth not—for a week, anyhow.

Nevertheless, that does remind me of the "losing" battle that excellent actor, Roman Bohnen, is waging in the gelatins these days. With the aforesaid ladies and gentlemen, in "The Hard Way," he loses his pants. In "Edge of Darkness," with Errol Flynn, Ann Sheridan, Ruth Gordon, Judith Anderson et al., he loses his head. In "Mission to Moscow," with Walter Huston and the rest, he loses his life! Discouraging, isn't it?

Entitled to the Best

Its faith in new and untried scripts long since having become a matter of note, the Speech and Drama Department of Catholic University further deems it its bounden duty, once a new work has been accepted, to give it as complete and painstaking a production as any drama occupying a proved place in dramatic literature. This has proved a valuable "assist" to such new campus plays as "Brother Orchid," "Art and Prudence," "Yankee Doodle Boy," "Storm," "Count Me In" and others that have originated out Northeast way. So, on the assurance of Father Gilbert V. Hartke, the guiding spirit of C. U. dramatics, when "The King Is Dead," the new piece by Victoria Kuhn, opens in the University Theater on next Wednesday night, it will be given the benefit of the full resources at the theater's command. Ralph Brown has designed two elaborate scenic backgrounds for the spirited action of the play and such C. U. favorites as Dick Sykes, Cecilia Brown, William McGuire and Victor Dial will head the cast. "The King Is Dead" will run for a full week.

Mr. Fortune Gallo, impresario of the San Carlo Grand Opera Co., would have it known—preferably by shouting from the housetops—that yesterday he succeeded in signing Norbert Ardelli to sing the leading male role of Radames in the performance of Verdi's "Aida," which tomorrow night will bring the week's engagement in the National Theater to a close. The title role will be sung by Willa Stewart, with Marjorie Mayer, Mostyn Thomas and Harold Kravitt in support. One suspects that Mr. Gallo will not be too annoyed if mention is made of the fact that Puccini's "La Boheme" will be the bill for the Sabbath matinee.

Paul Muni will head the list of celebrated stage and screen stars, including Sylvia Sidney, Luther Adler and Jacob Ben Ami, who will be coming to Washington for the local presentation of "We Will Never Die" in Constitution Hall on Monday, April 12. Supporting the noted artists who will participate in the mass memorial dedicated to the two million Jews who have been killed by the Nazis will be a cast of several hundred. "We Will Never Die," as everybody must know by now, was written by Ben Hecht. It is produced by that diminutive Titan among showmen, Billy Rose, and directed by Moss Hart. The stars will appear here in the same roles they originally enacted when the pageant first was presented in New York on March 9. On that occasion the memorial was scheduled for one performance at 8:30 p. m., but had to be repeated at 11 to accommodate a total audience in excess of 40,000—in Madison Square Garden, needless to say.

Tomorrow evening at 7:15 o'clock, at Hotel 2400, the United Nations Club will present the French feature film, "A Nous La Liberte" as the piece de resistance of its fourth program in a continuing series. The picture is gay, amusing and nonpolitical. It will be augmented on the program by "The Fighting French Navy," in which wide interest has been expressed.

Ration-Books-Cast-Their-Shadows-Before Note

Earle

Actor-Singer

DENNIS MORGAN

recalled to Hollywood from a personal appearance tour in conjunction with "The Hard Way," to costar with Alexis Smith in the Warner Brothers production of "The Animal Kingdom"

As was to have been expected, "Star Spangled Rhythm" has sung, danced and laughed its way into a second week at the Earle.

Those attending this Gargantuan, Paramount frolic in quest of "plot structure," a serious treatment of the "drahma" or any of the other substantial qualities usually encountered in the higher reaches of the theater, won't find them and had better stay home. On the other hand, those in search of a couple of hours of unadulterated fun, foolishness and flippancy, purveyed by an army of stars, featured players and acting directors, will remain away at the peril of missing the entertainment they probably would refer to as long as they live as the "time of their lives."

Packed with "blackouts," skits, sketches and "gags," interspersed with occasional songs and enlivened by a bit of dancing now and again, "Star Spangled Rhythm," despite the complaints of the doctors of relentless logic, still can boast enough of a plot to hold the whole thing together.

Even if it couldn't, the presence up there on the screen of such as Bob Hope, Victor Moore, Paulette Goddard, Dorothy Lamour, Veronica Lake, Betty Hutton, Eddie Bracken, Fred MacMurray, Cecil B. De Mille, Preston Sturges, Walter Catlett, Franchot Tone, "Rochester," Walter Dare Wahl & Co., William Bendix, Gil Lamb, Cass Daley and practically everyone else you ever heard of on the Paramount lot, would be enough to pay off on the price of admission.

An Uncommonly Attractive Panhandler!

ANNE GWYNNE

who adds her name to those of Ann Sheridan, Mary Martin, Ann Miller and numerous others as a favorite of the State she's "deep in the heart of." One of the most popular starlets on the Universal lot, the 5-feet-5 Miss Gwynne twice has honored her native State on the screen—first in Universal's "Men of Texas," and now in "We've Never Been Licked," story of Texas A. and M., the famous Texas Aggies, currently in the making

HEDDA HOPPER

Among the Unsung!

Hollywood, Calif., March 26.—When you see the stars doing hair-raising stunts in pictures, you know their doubles are doing the dirty work for them. But there are a couple of unsung heroes in "Air Force" who did their own—Elmer Dyer and Charles Marshall, middle-aged photographers, who risked their lives not once, but dozens of times during the shooting down in Florida. It's nothing new to these boys. They've shot every big air picture that's been made here, from "Wings" and "Hell's Angels" on down the line. In fact, they have the serial photography business sewed up tight, and other photographers say, "You guys can have it!' They've worked under all sorts of conditions, from freezing cold to tropical heat, strapped in their planes—even strapped to the wings, in the old days . . . Incidentally, four of the boys who played roles in that picture are now either in the service or dated up with Uncle Sam. Ray Montgomery is in the merchant marine, Gig Young in the Coast Guard; Arthur Kennedy went into the Army, and Charlie Drake leaves soon.

GLADYS GEORGE

Stranger Than Fiction

Helen Freeman, while doing a test for "Saratoga Trunk" the other day, got to talking to a French girl, who turned out to be Sophie Huxley, niece of Aldous Huxley. The coincidence was that when Helen was returning here from France in 1938, Sophie's mother asked her to bring the girl along with her. Then, as the war clouds blew over a bit, she gave up the idea. Now Sophie is playing Helen's daughter in the picture. . . . Republic has permission from the Maritime Commission to use background scenes at the Merchant Marine Academy at Kings Point, Long Island, for the picture "Merchant Marine." . . . Gladys George has been signed by P. R. C. for "Isle of Forgotten Sins," with John Carradine, Sidney Toler, Rita Quigley. Gladys plays a derelict in the South Seas.

Here and There

Brian Donlevy's starring in King Vidor's "America," so background shots will be taken at Donlevy's tungsten mine in the desert. . . . Louis Armstrong, whose trumpet playing in "Cabin in the Sky" is something, says he can't help being hot—he's a firecracker baby, born on the Fourth of July. . . . Several months ago, when Abbott and Costello put on a show for the Hollywood American Legion, the late Joe D'Amico poked fun at rumors that the boys were scrapping. At which Lou Costello jumped up, put his arm around Bud, and swore he'd quit show business rather than work with any other partner. Now it comes out Bud feels the same way. He'll make no appearances till Lou recovers from his illness. Says Bud, "Who'd want eggs without ham?"

Spoon-Fed Lion Club

Timoshenko is being spoon-fed these days—but don't let it get you down. That's the name of the baby lion presented to the boys of "This Is the Army" by Joan Leslie for a mascot. It was all very well at first, but Timoshenko's growing up now and getting to be more of a problem every day, with a soldier detailed to take care of him . . . Frances Langford's been signed to sing Irving Berlin's newest song. Not titled yet, in that picture . . . and George Murphy's down with the measles! Had to be sent home form the set the other morning.

Still Irish

Pat O'Malley, the comedian, has put a "J" in front of his name to distinguish himself from our Pat who's been here for years. He's got himself a good part in "Thumbs Up," and so has Elsa Lanchester. That, together with her Turnabout theater and the canteen, doesn't leave Elsa much time for sleep these nights. . . . When Milton Berle learned that his wife, Joyce Mathews, had the German measles, he wired, "Who quarantined you—the board of health or the F. B. I.?"

Fred Regan, of the Navy, writes from the South Pacific: "Joe E. Brown's just left here. You'll never know what it's meant to all of us. It's the only entertainment we've had. You see, we're too far south for the rest of the entertainers, but we'll be laughing at his jokes for months. When I come back, I'll walk a mile to see Joe E. in any picture."

Columbia

Moving directly down F Street to the Columbia Theater, following a four-week engagement at the Palace, "Random Harvest" continues its uninterrupted success in Washington. Costarring Ronald Colman and Greer Garson, the film version of James Hilton's novel is an exciting romance which harkens back to World War I for its theme of an amnesia victim who is haunted by the closed-door chapter of his life.

Susan Peters makes a charming screen debut as the young girl who futilely trys to fill a void in the central character's emotional life. The supporting roles are played by Philip Dorn, Bramwell Fletcher and Reginald Owen.

Broadway Glossary

New York, March 26.

MOVIE: Greta Garbo will make her next movie in England. She will appear in the film adaptation of George Bernard Shaw's "St. Joan" . . . Gabriel Pascal, who produced the other Shaw movies, will produce this one too. Wolfgang Reinhardt, son of Max Reinhardt, who arranged the Garbo-Pascal deal, will be associate producer . . . M.-G.-M. will release the movie.

GRETA GARBO

RISK: The other night in New York, "Desert Victory," the British documentary film about the successful campaign of the Eighth Army, was previewed. It is by far the best movie of the war—a historic screen record of the men, machines and the bayonets which scattered Rommel's army . . . Lieut. Col. David Macdonald, who supervised the making of this action-film, armed each of his cameramen with a revolver—a .38. Of these men, four were killed, seven wounded and six captured. "When you get so close to the enemy that you can use the revolver," Col. Macdonald instructed them, "that's the time to use your camera."

LOSS: One of Eighth Army's still-photographers, a Scot, was captured at Tobruk. He had two cameras, and the Nazi intelligence officer who examined him asked that he surrender both. The cameraman explained that one of them belonged to the Army, but that the other was his own, personal one, "and ye no can hae it" . . . The Nazi accepted the Army camera—for which the Scot demanded a receipt, and got one . . . The cameraman presented this receipt, for the Army records, two days later, when he and other prisoners were abandoned by the retreating Nazis.

ROMANCE: Henri Bernstein, the French playwright, was in El Morocco, seated next to a pretty lady. The young man to her right vied for her attention, then turned to Bernstein and announced: "I found this girl. And I'm leaving with her" . . . "That's only the first and third acts," replied the dramatist, his arm around the lady. "Let's not forget the second act."

AMBITION: Ken Kling, the cartoonist who draws "Joe and Asbestos," is in his middle forties. He received the usual occupational questionnaire from the draft board, asking him to designate which jobs he thought he could handle . . . Kling wrote "Steamfitter and Plumber's Helper" . . . A few days later Kling was summoned by the draft board. "You're a cartoonist, and you have a big reputation in horse-racing circles. What makes you think you can be a steamfitter and plumber's helper? That's so different from your present job" . . . "Frankly," Kling explained, "all my life I've wanted to be a steamfitter and plumber's helper."

TRAVEL: For the first time since the war began, an American citizen who has no war mission in England has been permitted to go there. The citizen is the 1-year-old child of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Von Hofmanstael . . . The child was permitted to accompany its mother, a British citizen, to London. They traveled on a Portuguese boat . . . This week the child's father, who was born in Vienna and now is stateless, leaves for England to represent Time, Inc.

SUCCESS: A young producer, who owes money to many of his friends and who has been ruthless in his desire for wealth and power, sat with Billy Rose in Lindy's and told of his current successes. Two people walked by his table, and waved hello to him . . . "See how successful I am?" the young producer beamed. "People who don't even know me are saying hello to me." . . . "You really will be successful," Rose told him, "when people who DO know you start saying hello to you."

ADVICE: Tallulah Bankhead was visited backstage at "The Skin of Our Teeth" by one of her distant relatives—a girl who is attending one of the most fashionable colleges in the East . . . Tallulah, now giving the finest performance of her career in this Thornton Wilder play, settled back in her chair and studied the photos of her new farm. She was dressed in slacks, which revealed her figure as trim as ever . . . "What're you doing now, darling?" Tallulah asked . . . "I'll be graduated from college in two more months," the girl informed . . . "How silly," the star laughed. "I never went to school past 14—and look at me now."

Metropolitan

Her stay at the Earle completed, Mary Ann, the Flying Fortress heroine of "Air Force," has landed at the Metropolitan to resume her epic journey, which commences in San Francisco and, after a death-dealing tour of the South Pacific, winds up in Tokyo.

An excitement-packed saga of the skies, "Air Force" is a fitting tribute to the men and planes that carry the warfare directly to the enemy. Its theme of heroism beyond the call of duty makes for a tense, dramatic film which is only momentarily relieved by the humorous incidents which occasionally occur.

Importantly cast as the crew of the plane are such excellent performers as Harry Carey, John Garfield, John Ridgely, Gig Young and George Tobias.

No Legislation

Auxiliary Ills Aired At Hearing

The ills of the District's auxiliary police force were given a thorough airing before a House District Subcommittee yesterday, with all parties finally concluding that the difficulties could be adjusted without resorting to legislative action.

At a session conducted by Representative McMillan (Democrat) of South Carolina, chairman of the Police and Fire Subcommittee, representatives of the auxiliaries listed three major complaints against the present municipal operation of their corps:

1. They don't get enough action.
2. They don't know exactly what their status is under revised policies of the Commissioners.
3. They want power to make arrests on their own hook.

Keech Throws Light

Complaint number two was somewhat dissipated with the reading by Corporation Counsel Richmond B. Keech of the new District policy on auxiliaries, which specifically limits their "on duty" status to air raids or similar emergencies. It also allows them to make arrests only when accompanied by a regular police officer or in cases where an ordinary citizen would have the right of arrest.

A number of the auxiliaries warned that the restricting of service by this order was causing interest to fall off among members of the force because "they don't have enough to do." It was suggested that some plan might be worked out whereby the auxiliaries could accompany regular policemen on tours of duty on off nights to gain working experience and keep busy, and the Commissioners agreed to see if this could be arranged in some way.

Nothing Promised

Nothing was promised in the way of right to arrest, and Superintendent of Police Kelly said flatly that it would be unwise to let all of the auxiliaries carry firearms—which cannot be obtained anyway.

It is also impossible to get uniforms for the entire corps, he added.

No mention was made during the hearing of McMillan's pending bill to reorganize the auxiliary force and place it on a virtual par with the Metropolitan Police. McMillan said after the meeting that his subcommittee would study the problem further, but had hopes that all differences could be settled by an "understanding" between the Commissioners and the auxiliaries.

Kite Builders Compete Today In D.C. Contest

Kite flying has come a long way from the back pasture.

Blue skies today will bring out the District's younger scientific geniuses with their modern-day knowledge of aerodynamics, wind pressure, gravitational pull, the sustaining power of surfaces in motion and such, when five champion kite makers will be chosen at five playgrounds, Anacostia Park—D, Macfarland Recreational Area, Stoddard Playground, Taft Recreation Center and Hoover Playground. Hours are 10 a. m. to 1 p. m.

Kites will be classified "according to principle of operation." So say the rules. These are tailed kites with plain plane surface and tail; parakites, plane surface and no tail; and cell kites, that is, box types. Then there might be some tetrahedal or aerocurve kites.

Awards will be made for (1) workmanship: neatness, strength and design, that is, "the application of scientific principles to flying quality;" (2) appearance, which may be artistic or amusing; (3) performance, steepness of flying angle, steadiness and duration.

The grand champion of each playground may be chosen for a single kite or on the basis of several he submits.

Fathers are not to be left out, though the first three age classifications are all under 17 years. In a separate category fathers and sons contest. All adults must be accompanied by a child under 12.

Jalopy Drive Seen Helping Street Safety

The "jalopy junking round-up" will be doing the city a favor by removing vehicles unsafe for operation from Washington streets, in addition to aiding the war effort," Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer said last night.

Van Duzer pointed to the many "border-line" cars on the streets—cars which have outlived their usefulness and barely pass the inspection requirements, and which soon afterward become unsafe.

"The sooner we can clear out these 'border-line jalopies' the better," he said.

Van Duzer also reminded motorists that the drive to salvage vital materials from these "wrecks on wheels" presents an opportunity to patriotic motorists who do not plan to take out 1943 license plates. Instead of junking such cars on a vacant lot or leaving them parked on side streets, the owners can relieve themselves of responsibility by donating the vehicles to the District Salvage Committee, he said.

Records of the Department of Vehicles and Traffic show that there are some 600 cars with "condemned" stickers on the streets, Van Duzer said, and the round-up is helping the department locate cars which have been missing since title and tags were taken out—cars which appeared for inspection and which haven't been heard from since.

All cars "found" in the round-up, Horace Walker, executive secretary of the committee, said, are cleared through Van Duzer's department.

Walker again pointed out the convenience of the method of disposal of a "jalopy" by its owner, who needs merely to call the Police Department, National 4000; call the District Salvage Committee, Republic 8488; or fill out the form which appeared in The Post last Sunday. The Salvage Committee assumes the responsibility of moving the car.

Wife of Retired Army General Is Dead at 62

Mrs. Roderick Leland Carmichael, 62, wife of Maj. Gen. Roderick Leland Carmichael, U. S. A. (retired), former Army Chief of Finance, died unexpectedly yesterday at her home, 2511 Cliffbourne Place Northwest. Funeral services will be held at 1 p. m., Monday, at Fort Myer Chapel, with burial following in Arlington Cemetery. The Rev. John C. Palmer, of the Washington Heights Presbyterian Church, 1862 Kalorama, Road Northwest, will officiate.

Mrs. Carmichael, a resident of the District for the last 24 years, was born September 17, 1880, in Rowland, N. C., the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. William H. McCallum. She received her education at Flora McDonald College in Red Spring, N. C. Following her marriage in Rowland to General Carmichael in 1900, she accompanied him on several tours of duty throughout the United States, and also to China, the Philippine Islands, and Puerto Rico.

She became a resident of Washington in 1917, when General Carmichael received permanent station here. On April 22, 1928 he was appointed Army Chief of Finance, a position he held until April 22, 1932. He retired from active service shortly thereafter.

Besides her husband, Mrs. Carmichael is survived by a son, Lieut. Col. Roderick Leland Carmichael, jr., United States Army, and three daughters, Mrs. John E. Stephens of Rutherford, N. J., Mrs. Call Dickinson of Des Moines, Iowa, and Mrs. George R. Mather of Washington.

Ben B. Lindsey Dead; Juvenile Court Judge

By the Associated Press

Los Angeles, March 26.—Benjamin B. Lindsey, jurist, writer, lecturer and lifelong campaigner for the integrity of the American home, died of a heart attack today.

Judge Lindsey, 73, and known as the founder of the American juvenile court system, was stricken Wednesday, but the day before had presided as usual, over the Children's Court of Conciliation, which he started. He had been a Superior Court judge here since 1934.

Judge Lindsey had been working in behalf of legislation to simplify handling juvenile cases in California, and his widow, Henrietta, said worry over the belief he was not receiving proper cooperation from public officials may have contributed to his illness.

"He lived for his work," she said, "and he died for it."

Judge Lindsey gained his initial fame in Denver, Colo., as champion of legislation which held parents and employers legally responsible for acts of delinquency by juveniles.

He gained perhaps his widest fame as an advocate of companionate marriage." In a widely discussed book he advocated experimental, legal marriages for young persons, of perhaps a year's duration, with parenthood not contemplated. If a young man and wife then found they were not suited for each other, a divorce might be advisable.

Lindsey, born in Jackson, Tenn., in 1869, was admitted to the Colorado bar in 1894. In 1900 he was appointed and later elected a judge of the juvenile court. He served on that bench until 1927.

Judge Lindsey, a vigorous fighter for political reforms, often was embroiled in controversies, and one such led to his removal from his Denver court bench.

He wrote a number of books, among them "The Companionate Marriage," "The Doughboy's Religion" and "The Dangerous Life,' an autobiography.

Surviving besides his wife, is a daughter, Benetta B. Lindsey, 19, student at Santa Barbara State College, California.

South May Quit Democrats, Jones Warns

By the Associated Press

Tallahassee, Fla., March 26.—Gov. Sam Jones of Democratic Louisiana declared flatly today there "is now a definite indication the South may break away from the Democratic Party," if it doesn't get what it wants in solving its economic problems.

He commented for publication soon after United States Senator Claude Pepper (Democrat) of Florida told the Southern Governor's Conference that "the South's future lies in faithful fidelity to that party which honestly believes in liberalism."

Pepper said only the Democratic Party offered that liberalism "define by Thomas Jefferson as the Government that resists the rich against pillaging the poor."

Yesterday Govs. Jones and Ellis Arnall of Georgia called for the South to "become hard-boiled politically" in demanding greater recognition for the South from the Federal Government. Arnall said that Georgia, when time comes for nomination of a President, will follow "those who offer the most for the South."

Pepper said that if the Republican Party or any other party offered "greater opportunities" for the South than the Democratic Party, "I would rather see us embrace that party." But, he added, the Republican Party "is still the party of monopoly, big business and vested money interests, and there is nothing they can offer the South that would compensate for the dereliction we would commit in throwing ourselves into their arms."

He offered "to bet" that the Republicans would nominate as their next presidential candidate, Governor Bricker of Ohio, because Wendell Willkie is "too liberal for them."

Federal Worker's Father Dies of Heart Attack

Frederick W. Liebert, 58, of New York, father of Herman Liebert, 3042 Cambridge Place Northwest, was found dead, as the result of a heart attack, in his bed at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., yesterday. He was attending a civilian orientation training course for industrialists.

He was vice president of John Nickerson Co. of New York. His son is engaged in confidential work with the Federal Government here and was formerly a member of the executive editorial staff of the Paul Block publications. He is on leave of absence from his newspapers.

The elder Mr. Liebert had gone to Leavenworth on March 16 to take the course which is designed to familiarize civilians with Army problems.

TERRY AND THE PIRATES — Ingredients for Plot-Luck — By Milton Caniff

THERE EES NOW ALMONDS, SOAP—AND MORPHINE FEELCHED FROM HER MEDEECAL KEST...
ALMONDS FOR ODOR, SOAP FOR FROTH AT THE MOUTH—AND EET APPEARS I HAVE TAKEN POTASSEEUM CYANIDE... WHEN THE RUSH TO HOSPEETAL OCCURS, THEN THE MORPHINE GOES TO WORK!

MARY WORTH'S FAMILY — By Dale Allen

IF YOU PLEASE... SALLY O'KEENE SENT ME... SOMETHING ABOUT ...BEING A BRIDE...!
OH... DID SHE? SALLY MUST BE CRAZY AS A QUILT! YOU'RE NOT MY TYPE! NOT MY TYPE AT ALL!
NOW, LISTEN! I DON'T KNOW WHO YOU ARE... BUT IF YOU THINK YOU CAN STAND THERE WITH YOUR FACE HUNG ON A PIECE OF BURNING BUGGY-WHIP AND TELL ME...!!
HOLD IT! YOU LOOK BETTER WHEN YOU'RE SORE! MAYBE I CAN USE YOU! I'M JACK TOWERS... YOU KNOW... MODELS... SALLY THOUGHT YOU'D DO FOR A TROUSSEAU SERIES ...FASHION BOOK... SIT DOWN... TAKE OFF THAT IDIOTIC HAT... HURRY, HURRY!
Y-YES, MR. TOWERS!

MICKEY FINN — Cornered! — By Lank Leonard

WE'LL BE LUCKY IF WE SPOT HIM IN THIS CROWD, MICKEY!
WE'LL HAVE A BETTER CHANCE WHEN THE MUSIC STARTS AGAIN— A LOT OF 'EM WILL GET UP TO DANCE!
TOM! LOOK! OVER IN THE CORNER!

MR. AND MRS. — You Like It or You Don't — By Arthur Folwell and Ellison Hoover

I SORT OF LIKE IT, BUT IT'S NOT—OH, WELL! WHY DO YOU FUSS OVER IT SO?
AND WHY SHOULDN'T I? BECAUSE YOU KNOW YOU LIKE IT. SO LET IT GO AT THAT
YES, I LIKE IT IN SOME WAYS, BUT A NEW HAT IS LIKE— WELL— YES, YES. A NEW HAT IS LIKE—
IS LIKE AN EGG. IF THERE'S ANY DOUBT ABOUT IT— THEN THERE'S NO DOUBT ABOUT IT. RIGHT YOU ARE

DIXIE DUGAN — Absent — By J. P. McEvoy and H. J. Striebel

DIXIE IS FORCED TO TEACH HER NIGHT REFORM SCHOOL MUCH AGAINST HER WILL
BEFORE WE PROCEED WITH OUR FIRST GRADE LESSON, WHERE IS MR. DUGAN?
ARE YOU KIDDIN'? GO AHEAD WIT D'LESSON
JOE DUGAN IS THE MAN WHO BROUGHT ME HERE—WHO STARTED ALL THIS—THERE AIN'T— I MEAN ISN'T NO GUY NAMED DUGAN—PSSST-
SHE PROBABLY MEANS BARNEY
OH
OH—UH—YES, YA MEAN JOE! SURE TING! UH—JUST MARK HIM ABSENT—I MEANT I'TELL YA—HOW STUPID OF ME!
FOR THAT LAST REMARK YOU GET 100 PER CENT—
ALTHOUGH DIXIE KIDS BACK, SHE FULLY REALIZES THE GRAVITY OF THE SITUATION. SHE'S LOCKED IN WITH A NEW GANGSTER ELEMENT IN HADES PANTRY—WHAT THEIR RACKET IS SHE DOESN'T KNOW

Washington Red Cross Quotas Shifted

Three shifts in unit quotas—one raised, two lowered—were announced yesterday by Campaign Director Randolph Bishop of the District Red Cross $1,555,400 war fund drive.

The goal of the general business division was increased from $311,400 to $400,000 at the suggestion of Chairman Charles A. Robinson, who reported that his unit reached its original quota early this week. The new figure means that general business volunteers still have $72,392 to raise.

Simultaneously the goals of the residential and city divisions, new to the Red Cross drive, were reduced a proportionate amount. The new residential quota is $190,535, which leaves it with $24,537 to collect, and the city division figure has been set at $150,795, which means $29,759 still to be turned in.

Meanwhile Red Cross volunteers, within striding distance of their goal following Thursday's report of $1,341,303 collected, prepared for a mass rally to be held Monday at 10:30 a. m. at the United States Chamber of Commerce Building to celebrate the opening of booths in public buildings throughout the city.

The War Activities Committee of local theaters announced yesterday that all motion picture houses will have programs to celebrate Red Cross Theater Week from April 1 to 17 but that the special benefit performance by Hollywood stars scheduled for April 7 has been canceled.

The announcement stated that after all initial plans had been completed, it was found impractical to transport a large roster of stars to widely separated cities—Washington, New York, Detroit, Chicago and Dallas—in the seven-day period. The period of time could not be extended because of commitments already made by the players in the company.

And at the Chamber of Commerce, which has turned over its spacious quarters at 1615 H Street Northwest to the Red Cross without charge for the drive, Nurse Margaret Fitzpatrick yesterday completed her job of soliciting for the Red Cross within the building—although she had to stay up an entire night to see the charwomen, who report for work each night at midnight.

Jefferson Day Proclaimed Here April 13

The District Commissioners last night officially proclaimed April 13 as Jefferson Day, marking the 200th anniversary of the birth of Thomas Jefferson, and the day on which the impressive three million dollar Jefferson Memorial will be dedicated.

In the proclamation, Jefferson, author of the Declaration of Independence, was described as "the architect of American liberty, whose words and deeds shine brighter with each passing year."

The proclamation said that true Americans of all races and creeds, regardless of political affiliation, will join on April 13 in honoring Jefferson.

A special exhibit of materials which illustrate the relations of Thomas Jefferson with the development of the Library of Congress will open April 12, simultaneously with other exhibits in the library, one day before the Jefferson bicentennial celebration, the library announced yesterday.

Antelopes Cousin (Duiker to You) Born at Zoo

For the first time in United States zoological history a large black duiker, cousin to antelopes, gave birth in captivity.

The "blessed event" occurred about 7:30 a. m. yesterday in the Zoo's small mammal house with nobody, official or nonofficial, around.

Unfortunately, it will be another day or so before the new duiker will be given one of the two universal classifications, the Zoo officials reported.

When visited yesterday, the young duiker was cuddled in a corner of its cage and seemed torn between a desire to go to sleep and to munch diced carrots. The mother duiker was on edge and paced the floor.

If someone from the Smithsonian-Firestone Expedition of 1940 had not captured its mother and father, the baby duiker would have been born somewhere between Liberia and the Gold Coast, Africa, surrounded by forest and probably a great many friends.

Then, too, there is the matter of a name. Persons of zoological erudition will console themselves with "Oh, a fine Cephalophus Niger;" while less scholarly, and perhaps less interested, Gold Coast natives would call it a bush goat and have done with it.

Some time in the future a meeting might be arranged for yesterday's arrival and a brown, not black, duiker, born several cages away last year.
